Dear Dr Tanti Utami,

Thank you for submitting your research article.

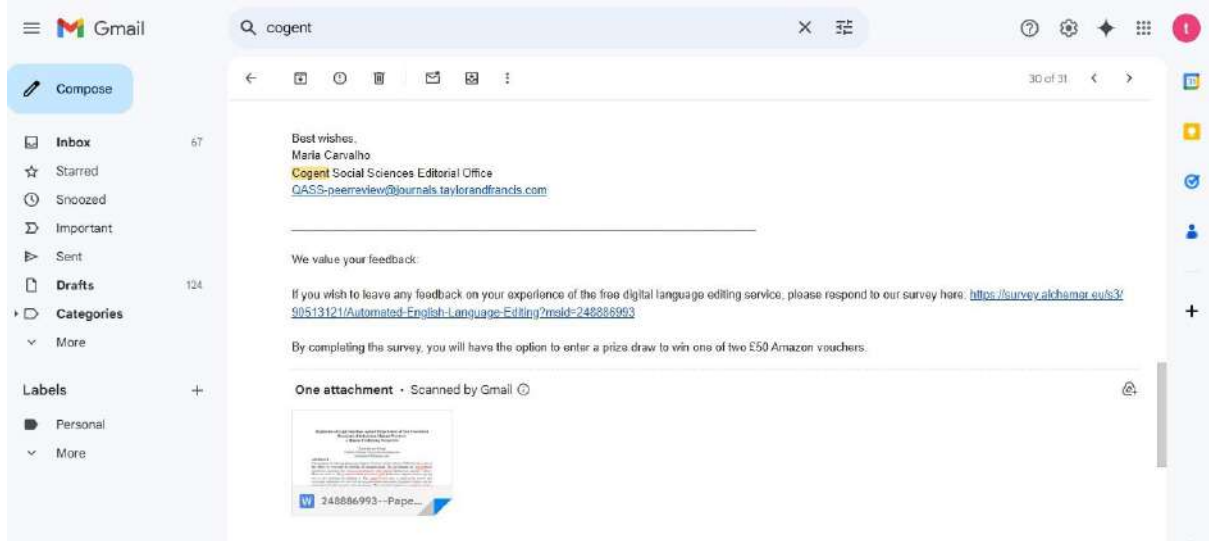

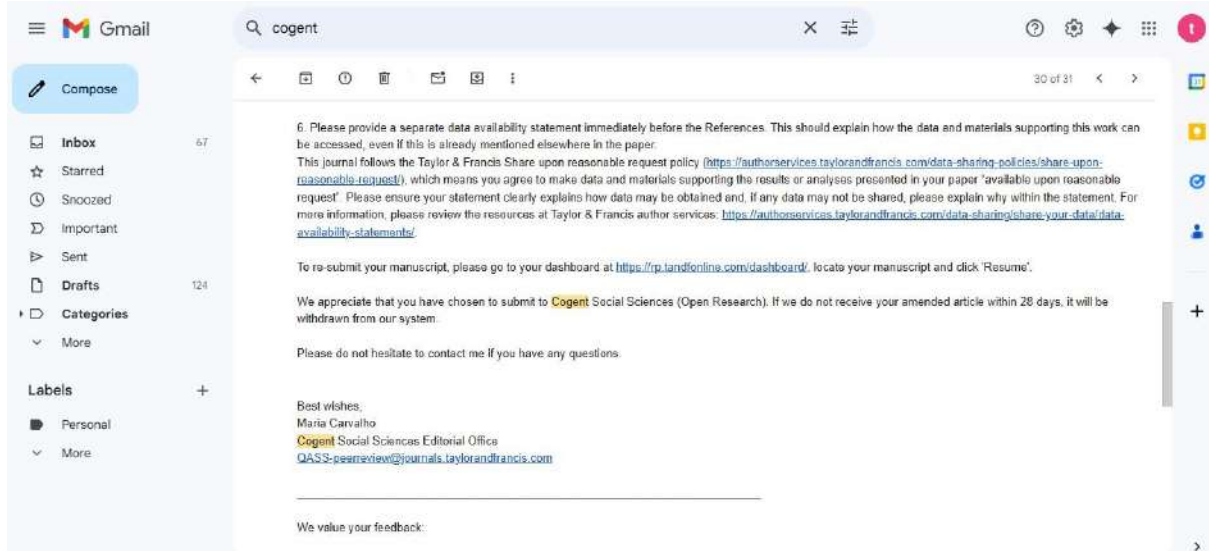

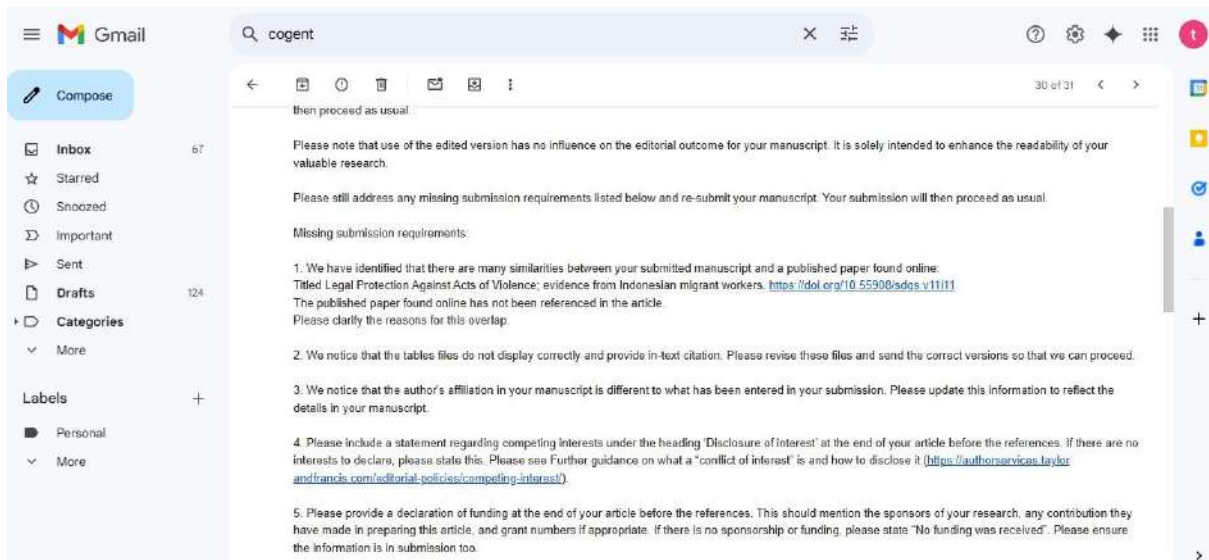

We are currently running a pilot project to support our authors by providing a free digital language editing service. We want to ensure that your manuscript has the best chance of success and is free from grammatical, spelling, and other common language errors, before it is reviewed by our editors and peer reviewers.

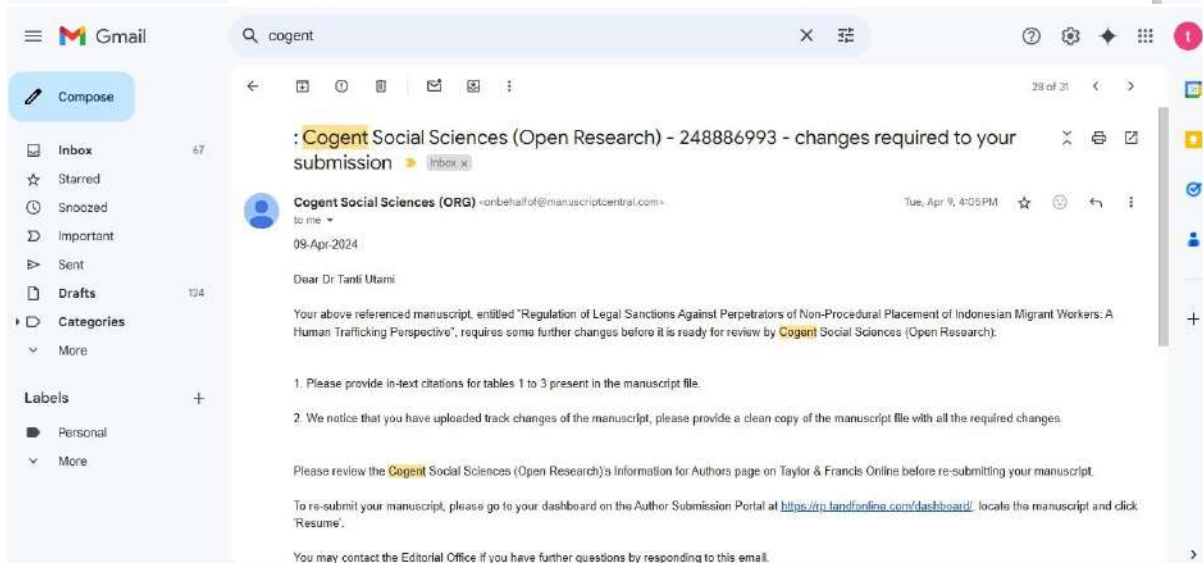

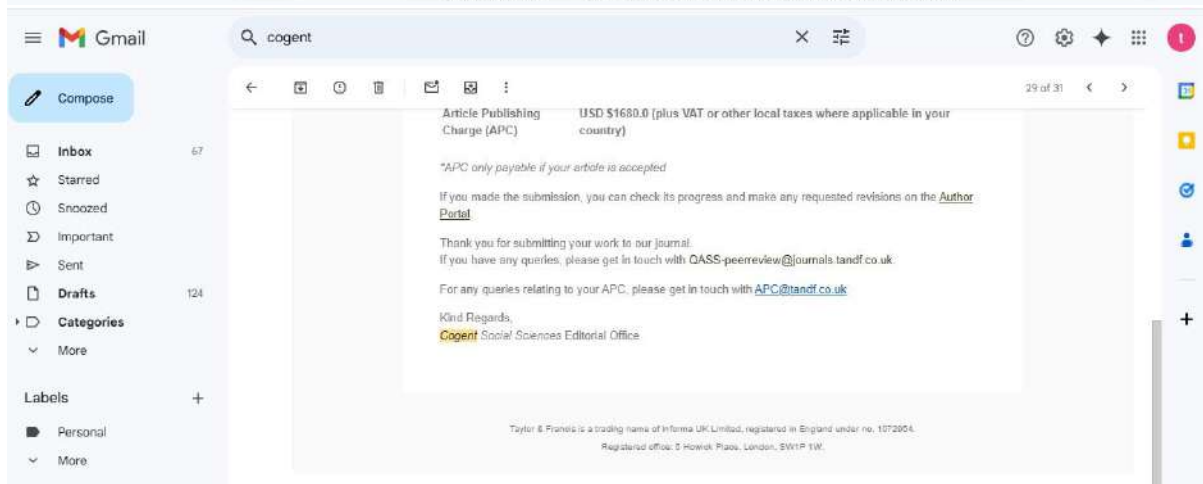

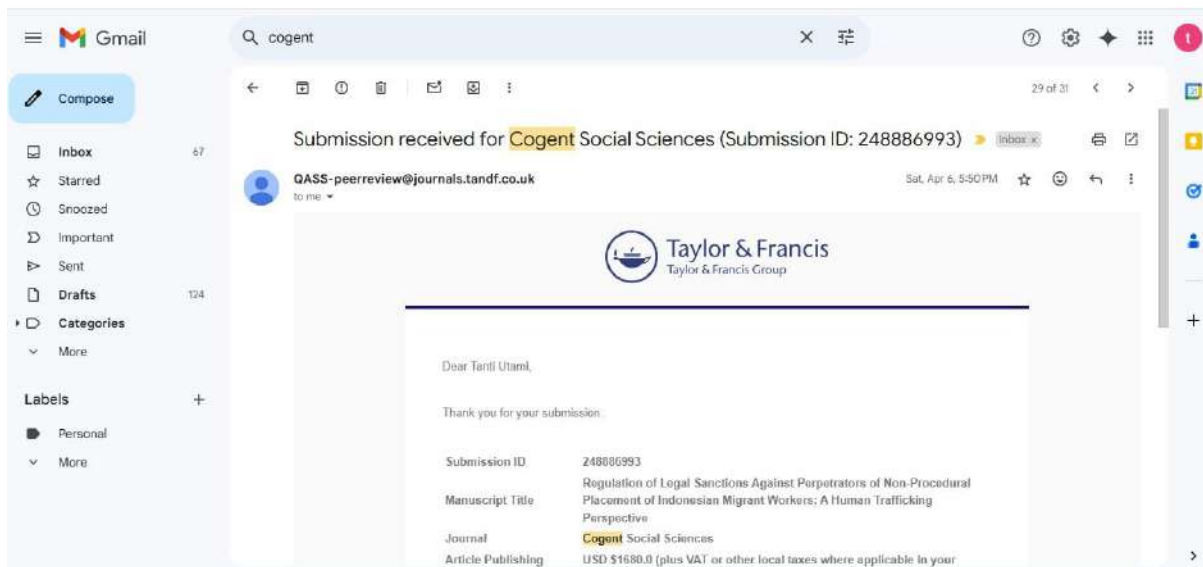

Having evaluated your submission, we encourage you to make use of this offer.

Attached to this email, you will find recommended edits to your manuscript, provided in track changes. You will need to review them, make any changes, and then re-submit an updated version of your manuscript.

What to do next:

1. Review each of the suggested edits carefully and choose which to accept or decline, ensuring that there have been no unintentional changes to your meaning.
2. Take note of any other missing submission requirements (listed at the bottom of this email) and include them in your new document.
3. Once you have saved a new, clean version of your edited manuscript, please re-upload it as your main document file for this submission. Your submission will then proceed as usual.

Overall, the author has demonstrated commendable writing and a thorough understanding of the subject.

To further strengthen the paper, I recommend creating a separate "Discussion" section. This would allow for a more in-depth analysis and a clearer presentation of the implications and nuances of the research findings.

Additionally, I noticed that several references do not adhere to the standard journal style. Specifically, the titles in the reference list should not be written in all capital letters. Adhering to the appropriate style will enhance the paper's professionalism and readability.

Furthermore, please consider citing the following references to strengthen the paper's academic foundation and provide a more comprehensive perspective:
1. <https://hi.umsy.ac.id/wp-content/uploads/2019/01/Suffer-to-Survive-The-Indonesian-Illegal-Workers-Experiences-in-Malaysia-and-Japan-.pdf>

If these revisions are made, I would highly recommend the manuscript for publication.

Comments to the Author

This research does not present novel findings, as many previous scholars have already explored the nexus between the weaknesses in Indonesian regulations and the factors driving migrant workers to use brokers and non-procedural routes. The researcher has not extensively utilized prior studies that address this issue. For instance, Johan Lindquist's work on brokering practices for Indonesian migrant workers and Ayyanthi Azis's evaluation of the Palermo Protocol for Indonesian migrant workers who are victims of trafficking on fishing vessels are not sufficiently referenced. Similarly, Wayne Palmer's research on the history of Indonesian regulations regarding migrant worker deployment abroad is also not reviewed in this article.

This research does not present novel findings, as many previous scholars have already explored the nexus between the weaknesses in Indonesian regulations and the factors driving migrant workers to use brokers and non-procedural routes. The researcher has not extensively utilized prior studies that address this issue. For instance, Johan Lindquist's work on brokering practices for Indonesian migrant workers and Ayyanthi Azis's evaluation of the Palermo Protocol for Indonesian migrant workers who are victims of trafficking on fishing vessels are not sufficiently referenced. Similarly, Wayne Palmer's research on the history of Indonesian regulations regarding migrant worker deployment abroad is also not reviewed in this article.

In the introduction, it is unclear what gap this article aims to address or what contribution it seeks to make to the study of migrant labour or migration regulation. The methodology section is brief and does not demonstrate that the research was conducted with thorough planning or that it can fill existing research gaps. The methodology would be strengthened by focusing on court rulings related to human trafficking involving Indonesian migrant workers. By analyzing these rulings, the researcher could provide a more current analysis of the factors driving migrants to use brokers and non-procedural routes. Additionally, the researcher could use recent case studies, such as online scams, to explore other methods of sending Indonesian migrant workers abroad. This could help evaluate why the Indonesian Migrant Workers Law fails to be effectively enforced.

The analysis is not in-depth and remains largely descriptive in the results and discussion section. The author merely summarizes discussions from other articles and the content of regulations. When discussing Law No. 21 of 2007 on Human Trafficking, the author is not cautious in noting that not all Indonesian migrant workers who depart via non-procedural routes are at risk of trafficking. Non-procedural routes primarily pertain to documentation and pre-departure training, whereas trafficking requires elements of process, method, and purpose to identify victims.

Therefore, revision of this article is not recommended.

Regulation of legal sanctions against perpetrators of non-procedural placement of Indonesian migrant workers: a human trafficking perspective

Tanti Kirana Utami
Faculty of Law Universitas Suryakancana, Cianjur, Indonesia

ABSTRACT

The program for placing Indonesian Migrant Workers abroad is one of the efforts to overcome the problem of unemployment. The government has enacted regulations regarding the placement of Indonesian migrant workers. However, there is still a non-procedural placement for Indonesian migrant workers, giving rise to new problems in handling it. This study aims to analyze the factors that encourage perpetrators to carry out the non-procedural placement of migrant workers and the application of legal sanctions for perpetrators. The research method uses a qualitative normative juridical approach, which looks at problems from the study of legal materials such as books or articles that discuss research themes as references for primary and secondary legal materials. The data analysis technique used was descriptive analysis. The results of this research show that the increase in people or individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors; namely, the perpetrators receive a relatively large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, the educational conditions and knowledge of the victim or victim's family, and the victim's economic limitations. Perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement can be charged, apart from Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning PPMI, which can also be subject to Law Number 21 of 2007 concerning the Eradication of

ABSTRACT

The program for placing Indonesian Migrant Workers (abbreviated as PMI) abroad is one of the efforts to overcome the problem of unemployment. The government has made regulations regarding the mechanism for placing Indonesian migrant workers. However, there is still non-procedural placement of Indonesian migrant workers, giving rise to new problems in handling it. This research aims to analyze the factors that encourage perpetrators to carry out the non-procedural placement of migrant workers and the application of legal sanctions for perpetrators. The research method uses qualitative with a normative juridical approach, which looks at problems from the study of legal materials such as books or articles that discuss research themes as references for primary and secondary legal materials. The data analysis technique uses descriptive analysis. The results of this research show that the increase in people or individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors, namely, the perpetrators receive a relatively large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, the educational conditions and knowledge of the victim or victim's family and the victim's economic limitations. Perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement can be charged, apart from Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning PPMI; they can also be subject to Law Number 21 of 2007 concerning the Eradication of Criminal Acts of Trafficking in Persons (abbreviated as PTPPO), which is subject to legal sanctions of imprisonment or fines.

Keywords: Migrant Workers, Law, Illegal, Sanctions, Human Trafficking.

INTRODUCTION

Law is understood as a coercive order, which applies sanctions in the form of coercive actions. The provisions explaining the law in the law will appear as a statement that under certain conditions, which are also determined by that legal order, specific coercive actions are also determined by that order. The problem of migrant workers also continues to influence Indonesia's employment conditions, primarily related to the management, placement, and protection of migrant workers abroad. The government's way to reduce the unemployment rate is by placing workers abroad as Indonesian migrant workers (Muthia, 2020). Several problems are on the government's agenda that must be resolved; among these problems are the lack of job opportunities, the low economic level of society, and the low competitiveness of Indonesian migrant workers; these are serious problems that must be resolved (Sulaksono, 2018). To solve existing problems, it is hoped that sending migrant workers will be an alternative solution to the problem. On the one hand, remittances are an essential indicator for the economy of migrant worker families in the migrant worker's home village.

The high number of Indonesian citizens interested in becoming migrant workers, supported by the factors above, means that many agencies providing migration work are starting to emerge (Bulan, 2021). On the other hand, the emergence of migrant job providers currently cannot be trusted with 100% safety of their workers. The broker agents that are emerging at the moment are taking advantage of the situation of high demand for workers with worrying economic conditions and the lack of education of prospective migration workers so that prospective migration workers prefer to take shortcuts by using brokers rather than taking training first to be able to meet the requirements by the provisions as PMI (Febrianti & Afifah, 2023).

The large number of crimes that occur among migrant workers is a risk of the creation of non-procedural migration workers by broker agents who bring workers without going through proper procedures (Indrayani Arief, 2021). Risks such as fraud, violence, exploitation, human smuggling, human trafficking, and even murder can occur among Indonesian migrant workers who are victims of non-compliance with the requirements and procedures set out in the laws in force in Indonesia (Farbenblum et al., 2013).

The presence of irregular migrant workers is predicted to be quite large. The International Organization for Migration reports that there are around 58 million irregular/undocumented migrant workers. They are considered 'illegal' migrant workers because of several conditions, such as entering a country not by the procedures established by immigration law in that country, they are in a country but exceeding the period permitted by a visa, and travel document (passport) is no longer valid, or because they work without being registered as workers by labor law in a foreign country (Soulina & Yovani, 2020). This data is relatively high; at least a third of the world's migrant worker population reaches 150.3 million (Kusdarini et al., 2021).

Indonesia contributes data on non-regular migrant workers at the global level. The World Bank notes that 9 million Indonesian migrant workers work abroad, with the main destinations being Malaysia, Saudi Arabia, China, Hong Kong, and Singapore, where 48% of Indonesian Migrant Workers migrate non-procedurally. It is estimated that 70 percent of non-procedural migrant workers are women. Indonesia is the second largest country in Southeast Asia after the Philippines, with a sender of more than 25 migrant workers. It can be seen from data from the Indonesian Migrant Worker Protection Agency (abbreviated as BP2MI) that starting from early January to September 2022, there have been 122,870 people placed in various countries (Noor, 2023). The data obtained differs significantly from previous years, especially during the COVID-19 pandemic, where sending migrant workers was very limited. The average number of people currently registering are graduates from Senior High Schools (SMA).

The increasing number of interested migrant workers also benefits the government because it can help reduce the number of unemployed people and increase the amount of foreign exchange. Prospective migrant workers think working abroad is profitable because they get much better wages than in Indonesia. However, they need to think about the high risks they will experience (Dananjaya, 2020). The risks that will be experienced include violence, human trafficking, sexual exploitation, unpaid wages according to the work agreement, and very long working hours.

Based on the risks experienced by migrant workers, BP2MI has received complaints from Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) in various countries regarding the problems they experienced while working abroad. Currently, BP2MI has notified PMI complaints from January to September 2022, namely from Saudi Arabia as much as 29.5% with a total of 50 complaints, Malaysia as much as 16.5% with a total of 28 complaints, Taiwan as much as 10.6% with the number of 18 complaints, the UAE as much as 7% with a total of 12 complaints, Poland as much as 6% with a total of 10 complaints, and other countries as much as 30.4% with a total of 51 complaints. The complaints consisted of 102 illegal migrant workers, 83 complaints about unpaid salaries, 93 complaints of deaths in the destination country, 13 complaints of violence, and also 40 people of human trafficking. Of the many complaints received, they are legal workers or what could be called non-procedural workers. This is closely related to PMI's departure until they arrive at the destination country, where they are trapped in the game between brokers (Firdaus & Simangunsong, 2023).

Brokers have routes across various countries that are easy to travel, so they can convince local people to manage departures to work abroad. It has been regulated in Article 72 letter (b) of Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the prohibition of placement in closed countries, and prospective migrant workers must be placed in countries by the work agreement. This has also been regulated as in Article 71 of the Law Number 18 of 2017 (Dewi et al., 2021). Prospective migrant workers whose departure is illegal can still leave because they use fake documents that brokers from migrant worker-sending companies have prepared. Non-procedural migrant workers are very vulnerable to dangerous risks such as violence, human trafficking, and sexual exploitation, not to mention if they work for a company abroad. There is an inspection of the data collection of their citizens, the authorities can arrest non-procedural migrant workers—the person responsible for collecting resident data (Zamhir et al., 2023). It should be remembered that non-procedural migrant workers do not have official documents, so for those who experience violence or other risks abroad, the Indonesian government finds it very difficult to provide legal protection to non-procedural migrant workers (Puanandini, 2020). This differs from legal or procedural migrant workers; if they experience violence or have their rights confiscated by their employers, they will receive legal protection by Article 7 of Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers.

To protect Indonesian migrant workers abroad, the government issued Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers and various other regulations that regulate the placement mechanism for Indonesian migrant workers. This is done to protect migrant workers from becoming victims of human trafficking, victims of violence, and victims of other crimes. Despite this, the fact is that there are still many placements of Indonesian migrant workers that are carried out without fulfilling the procedures set out in statutory regulations. This has become the government's concern, and it is trying to provide a deterrent effect to perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement. Based on the problems above, researchers are interested in studying more deeply regarding law enforcement for perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement by limiting it to what factors support perpetrators to carry out non-procedural PMI placement and how legal sanctions are applied to perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement in Indonesia.

METHOD

The method used in this research is a normative juridical research method with descriptive-analytical research specifications, namely studying and analyzing the non-procedural sending of Indonesian migrant workers and providing an objective picture relating to law enforcement against perpetrators of criminal acts protecting Indonesian migrant workers linked to human trafficking. Based on Law Number 18 of 2017 and Law No. 21 of 2007. This research uses secondary data, including primary legal materials, secondary legal materials, and tertiary legal materials, namely statutory regulations, books, scientific articles, data taken from websites/internet, etc. The data collection technique used is library research.

RESULT AND DISCUSSIONS

Factors and Violations of Non-Procedural Placement of Indonesian Migrant Workers

The large population is disproportionate to the available jobs, which causes poverty and the inability to meet their living needs and livelihoods, thus requiring most Indonesian people to move to other countries to get work abroad. Migration of workers is an essential economic activity for sending and receiving countries. The high migration flow in this region is caused by countries that are economically dependent on migrant workers. Receiving countries are dependent on migrant workers for the mobilization of the economy, which can be seen from the high number of migrant workers in the country (Muthia, 2020).

The increase in Indonesian citizens becoming migrant workers and looking for work abroad in both the formal and informal sectors from year to year is due to various reasons, including domestic unemployment, insufficient domestic employment opportunities, disparities in global/regional economic growth, advances in transportation technology and information, the right to work abroad. The pull factor that exists abroad in the form of higher wages makes workers interested in working abroad. Working abroad has a positive side, namely overcoming some of the unemployment problems in the country. On the other hand, there is a negative side in the form of the risk of possible inhumane treatment of PMI (Febrianti & Afifah, 2023).

Data on placements of Indonesian Migrant Workers up to June 2023 illustrates that the number of placements of Indonesian Migrant Workers has increased over the last two years; namely, in June 2023, placements reached 20,388; in June 2022, there were 15,700 placements, and in June 2021, there were 6,661 placements. In June 2023, the majority of Indonesian Migrant Workers were placed in the formal sector, with 11,645 placements (55%), while in the informal sector, 8,743 placements (45%) (Firdaus & Simangunsong, 2023).

Based on the G to G Program placement scheme (PMI placement with the Government to Government scheme through the Indonesian Migrant Worker Protection Agency (BP2MI)), the number of Indonesian Migrant Workers placed by BP2MI in June 2023 was 963 placements, with details of 652 placements to South Korea, 311 placements to Japan in June 2023, and 0 placements to Germany. Meanwhile, based on the P-to-P placement scheme (PMI placement with a Private to Private or company-to-company scheme. This placement is carried out by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI) with the Agency in the destination country. Previously, P3MI was known as PJTKI or PPTKIS); P3MI placed 15,301 Indonesian Migrant Workers. Based on the Individual Placement Scheme, there are 1,848 placements. Based on the Placement Scheme for the Company's Own Benefits (abbreviated as UKPS), there are 17 placements. Complaint data increased in June 2023 compared to June 2021 and 2022. Most complaints in June 2023 came from Saudi Arabia, Malaysia and Hong Kong, while West Java and Central Java were the provinces with the highest complaints in June 2023. The most common complaints include Indonesian Migrant Workers wanting to be repatriated and placement costs that exceed the fee structure.

The stages of PMI placement, as regulated in Article 9 of Government Regulation Number 10 of 2020, often need to be followed according to the rules. This is what is called non-procedural PMI placement, whose victims have the possibility of becoming victims of human trafficking, victims of violence, or victims of other crimes. Non-procedural placement of migrant workers is the placement of Indonesian citizens who work abroad without going through correct PMI placement procedures by applicable laws and legal provisions, including falsifying documents and manipulating prospective PMI data, incomplete documents, and ignoring procedures and mechanisms. PMI placement does not use a work visa.

The rise in non-procedural PMI placements is caused by several factors, namely low education, limited job opportunities in the country, high levels of poverty, limited access to information/lack of public understanding about PMI placement and protection procedures, persuasion and sweet promises such as getting high salaries with a practical process, including the presence of brokers. The limited access to information, which results in a need for more public understanding regarding procedures for departure, placement and protection of PMI, impacts the emergence of many brokers or individuals who are ready to take care of non-procedural PMI through inappropriate procedures. So, PMI candidates need to be registered in the Computerized Overseas Workforce System (abbreviated as SISKOKTKLN).

The increase in people/individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors, namely, the perpetrators receive a relatively large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, the educational conditions and knowledge of victims/victims' families who are not aware of the placement. PMI, the victim's economic limitations mean they are easily persuaded and promised significant wages by the perpetrator.

There were several violations committed by the Private Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (abbreviated as PPTKIS), which has now changed its name to the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (abbreviated as P3MI) and the factors that caused the violations include:

1. Placement Fees that are Too High (Overcharging). Minister of Manpower and Transmigration Regulation Number 14/MEN /X/2010 regulates the burden of placement costs that Migrant Workers must bear, including identity documents, health checks, psychology, job training, and work competency certification. Some other costs are borne by Indonesian Migrant Worker (PMI) service users. Apart from these costs, other costs must be borne by migrant workers, which are regulated by a ministerial decree. Placement fees have been regulated in various Ministerial Decrees as a reference for the placement of Indonesian migrant workers abroad. The mechanism for paying placement fees for migrant workers has been criticized because the placement fees are too high. The government's support for the fate of migrant workers, especially Indonesian migrant workers, has not been implemented optimally. Many problems still need to be accommodated. Case data from the Indonesian Migrant Workers Union (SBMI) from 2015 to 2017 showed 1,501 complaints from various countries. The biggest complaint is related to expensive fees or overcharging. The cause of Overcharging is that Migrant Workers have signed the placement fee or Cost Structure (CS), but PPTKIS or P3MI still ask for additional money from prospective Migrant Workers (PMI) because the CS fee is less. In contrast, in reality, the CS fee by the Regulation of the Minister of Manpower and Transmigration Number 14/MEN/X/2010 is no longer relevant. There is no synchronization with other regulations, such as the Minister of Health's regulations regarding medical checkups and immigration regulations regarding making passports, whereas in the CS, medical fees and passports are no longer covered by these other regulations;
2. Falsifying the Identity of Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI). The act of forgery is only known in advanced societies, where specific data facilitates relations flow in society. Identity falsification/manipulation consists of two syllables: identity falsification/manipulation. Manipulation is a loan word originating from English: manipulation, which means misuse or misappropriation. In 2020, the Criminal Investigation Agency (abbreviated as Bareskrim) handled cases related to Migrant Worker Identity Falsification carried out by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI), which did not comply with procedures for recruiting prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI). Of some of them, there are many prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (CPMI) or Prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (CTKI) who are not yet old enough. However, in some PPTKIS/P3MI, many use services to change the age on E-KTP and family cards, which is one of the requirements for making a Passport. Apart from that, in the maritime sector, especially for fisheries, whether placed domestically or abroad, many companies use the services of individuals or what we could call "brokers" to create seaman's books and other skills certificates in a way that is against the law or illegal;
3. Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) do not receive enough job training. Article 12, paragraph 1 of Law Number 13 of 2003 states that employers are responsible for providing job training to improve the competence of their workers. However, for entrepreneurs who meet the requirements regulated by the Minister of Manpower's decision, increasing worker competency is an obligation according to Article 12, paragraph 2 of Law Number 13 of 2003. PPTKIS/P3MI are obliged to register with CPMI to take part in work competency training by Article 23 of the Regulation Minister Number 22 of 2014. However, in reality, many companies, in order to make a profit with little capital and a short time, training programs to support PMI competency often do not go through the appropriate channels in making CPMI competency certificates; among these cases, CPMI will be sent to the Destination Country, for example, Taiwan, the CPMI should take part in job and language training, but in reality the CPMI can leave for the destination country in a short time of around one week. So, from this case example, it can be seen that CPMI or CPTKI cannot learn job and language training in one week because, judging from CPMI's educational strata, the average is only an elementary school graduate. So, that became one of the factors that caused violence against CPMI and CTKI (Eddyono, 2021).

The cause of this is the lack of supervision from the government, which resulted in PPTKIS/P3MI being naughty in sending CPMI and CPTKI, who still had not received enough training abroad to meet PPTKIS/P3MI's annual targets.

Regulations and Application of Legal Sanctions for Perpetrators of Non-Procedural Delivery of Indonesian Migrant Workers Linked to Human Trafficking

Indonesia has had special regulations regarding PMI since Law No. 34 of 2004 concerning the Placement and Protection of Indonesian Workers Abroad (abbreviated as UU PPTKILN). This law is the first law to regulate migrant workers specifically. Although the existence of this law was pushed for its existence by non-governmental organizations to overcome the violence and exploitation experienced by migrant workers, especially women, the ratification of this law received criticism, considering that its contents were deemed to prioritize the process of placing PMIs rather than their protection. The existence of the law and the implementation of this law are considered not to help women who are non-regular migrant workers (Barid et al., 2022).

This law provides criminal regulations for parties who place migrant workers to work without permission. This law also criminalizes people who place prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (abbreviated as TKI) in positions or places of work that are contrary to human values and decency. Other crimes that are also regulated in this law include manipulating exam results, not guaranteeing health insurance, the process of transferring Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Implementation Permits (abbreviated as SIPPTKI) and TKI Mobilization Permits, placing TKI without documents. Even though it does not mention the term illegal undocumented or irregular migrant workers, this article could be a reference point for the non-procedural placement of female migrant workers. However, not all of the above acts are crimes. However, some are called violations, namely the placement of TKI without written permission and the placement of TKI or TKI without a Foreign Worker Card (abbreviated as KTKLN).

The 2017 PPMI Law replaced the existence of the PPTKILN Law. The 2017 PPMI Law defines migrant workers without distinguishing procedural or non-procedural status. In this law, Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) are stated as follows: "every Indonesian citizen who will, is, or has done work for wages outside the territory of the Republic of Indonesia." The scope of PMI in question is threefold: a) Indonesian Migrant Workers who work for legal entity employers; b) Indonesian Migrant Workers who work for individual or household employers; and c) Seafarers and fisheries sailors.

This law does not differentiate between PMI status, which includes procedural and non-procedural, as stated in the Migrant Workers Convention (1990), ratified in 2012. This lack of distinction does not necessarily mean that the position of PMI with procedural and non-procedural status is different. Even in the process of forming the PPMI Law, it was found that members of the Community Representative Council (abbreviated as DPR) did not want to touch on the issue of non-procedural migrant workers, considering that they considered the discussion of non-procedural PMI to be very complex (Tan & Shahrullah, 2017). According to them, it would be unwise to expressly open protection because it is feared that it will increase the number of non-procedural PMIs. At that time, DPR members focused on eliminating non-procedural PMI, as this effort was accommodated in the PPMI Law.

The protection regulations for PMI in this law emphasize protection before, during, and after work. In this context, work is emphasized on doing work in the country where you work. From the start, protection has been emphasized by protecting the administrative form, namely the procurement of complete and valid work documents and determining working conditions and conditions. This initial protection process becomes the basis for subsequent protection.

concerning the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers

Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers
Pre-Employment (Before Work)	During Work	Post Work
1. Administrative: completeness and validity of placement documents and determining conditions and terms of employment. 2. Technical: a) Providing outreach and information dissemination; b) Improving the quality of PMI candidates through education and job training; c) Social Security; d) Facilitate the fulfillment of the rights of PMI Candidates; e) Strengthening the role of functional delivery employees; f) Placement services in one-stop integrated services for PMI placement and protection; and g) Guidance and supervision.	1. Data collection and registration by the labor attaché or appointed foreign service official; 2. Monitoring and evaluation of employers, jobs, and working conditions; 3. Facilitate the fulfillment of PMI rights; 4. Facilitate the resolution of employment cases; 5. Providing consular services; 6. Assistance, mediation, advocacy, and provision of legal assistance in the form of facilitating advocate services by the Central Government or Representatives of the Republic of Indonesia, as well as guardianship following local state law; 7. Guidance for PMI; and 8. Facilitate repatriation.	1. Facilitate return to the area of origin; 2. Completion of PMI rights that have not been fulfilled; 3. Facilitate the management of sick and deceased PMI; 4. Social rehabilitation and social reintegration; and 5. Empowerment of PMI and their families.

Regarding regulations regarding prohibitions and punishments, the law has similarities and differences from those regulated by the PPTKILN Law. The PPMI Law expands the subject of punishment not limited to companies that place PMI but includes individuals and corporations related to 1) Prohibition of transferring or reassigning PMI Delivery Permits; 2) Prohibition of placing PMI candidates who do not meet health and psychological requirements; 3) Prohibition of PMI placements that are not by the work agreement. Another difference is that the PPMI Law emphasizes the prohibition of placements contrary to statutory regulations.

At the same time, the PPTKILN Law has three frameworks: prohibiting placements that are contrary to humanity, moral norms, and statutory regulations (Eddyono, 2021).

Apart from that, this law also introduces new prohibitions, which include: a) Providing incorrect information in filling out each document required in the migration process; b) Placement that is not by the work agreement is detrimental; c) Placement to certain countries which are declared closed for placement; d) PMI placement without a PMI Handover Permit; e) Placement of PMI without going to a country where there is no agreement between the Republic of Indonesia and that country; does not have a social or insurance system that protects foreign workers.

The PPMI Law also makes government officials legal subjects who can be punished for all types of crimes above with an emphasis on abuse of their power. Efforts to eliminate non-regular PMI can be seen from the numerous prohibitions contained in this law. However, the target of the PPMI Law covers all parties, including PMI, who provide incorrect information while filling out documents. Apart from that, the PPMI Law also decriminalizes several acts prohibited in the PPTKILN Law, which include: a) Placement of PMI candidates who do not have a Foreign Worker Card (abbreviated as KTKLN); b) Employing PMI candidates who are currently undergoing education and training; c) Detention of PMI departures who do not meet the document requirements.

Since the existence of Law No. 21 of 2007 concerning Human Trafficking, the law should be considered necessary for protecting female migrant workers who experience exploitation or fraud during the migration process. This law combines several types of human trafficking where human trafficking aims to exploit a person/group of people. Exploitation in the context of human trafficking includes a) Sexual exploitation in the form of prostitution or sexual exploitation; b) Exploitation or use of a person's energy to work in the form of forced service, slavery, or practices similar to slavery, oppression including physical use of a person; c) Exploitation of reproductive organs, transplantation of organs and/or body tissue of a person (Mihardi, 2020).

This exploitation is done to obtain benefits from the person being exploited through material or immaterial benefits. Law No. 21 of 2007 clearly states that the various exploitations carried out above are crimes whose perpetrators can be punished with criminal penalties. Punishment includes people who: a) Recruit, transport, harbor, send, transfer, or receive someone; b) By threat of violence, use of force, kidnapping, confinement, forgery, fraud, abuse of power or vulnerable position, debt bondage or providing payments or benefits; c) Despite obtaining the consent of the person who has control over another person; d) For exploitative purposes (Vicky & Rahaditya, 2022).

This law also punishes officials who abuse their power, resulting in trafficking crimes. In the context of non-procedural migrant workers, the practice of human trafficking often occurs using falsifying identities and fraud, which is often carried out with the lure or promise of good work or wages and working conditions that will be provided (Grange, 2005). Abuse or vulnerable positions often occur, such as being provided with funds or bailed out to finance the document processing and placement process. As in the example table below:

Law no. 6 of 2011 concerning Immigration regulates procedures for crossing Indonesian borders, the requirements for crossing Indonesian borders, including the documents required to be owned, the process of obtaining records, and the authority of Immigration, including revoking travel documents. In the context of women's non-regular migrant workers, there are regulations regarding preventive measures, repressive measures, and criminal regulations for attempts to smuggle and trade in people across national borders.

Punishment is regulated in this law for immigration crimes, including transnational crimes, which include smuggling and trafficking in persons. Immigration crimes that are connected to the issue of women non-regular migrant workers include unprocedural entry or exit without going through an immigration inspection (Article 113). This law elaborates many crimes related to travel documents which include (Articles 123-130) including making fake or falsifying travel documents, Visas or Entry Certificates, or Stay Permits: a) using fake or falsified Travel Documents; b) providing invalid data or incorrect information to obtain Travel Documents; c) have or use 2 (two) or more Republic of Indonesia Travel Documents of the same type and all of them are still valid; d) falsify or create false Travel Documents; e) keeping false or falsified Travel Documents; f) destroy, change, add, reduce or remove, either in whole or in part, the information or stamps contained in the Travel Document; g) control other people's travel documents (Anggreini & Herlina, 2019).

Some of the above prohibitions also emphasize crimes committed for oneself or others. This means that this law could ensnare female non-regular migrant workers about travel documents or other parties who hold migrant worker travel documents (Khalid & Savirah, 2022). Regarding cross-border smuggling crimes, the Immigration Law regulates the criminal act of smuggling as an act aimed at seeking profit, either directly or indirectly, for oneself or another person by bringing a person or group of people, whether organized or unorganized, or ordering another person to bring a person or group of people, whether organized or unorganized, into the Indonesian Territory or out of the Indonesian Territory and/or into the Territory of another country, where the person does not have the right to enter the Territory legally, either by using valid documents or fake documents or without using Travel Documents (Mahardika & Wicaksono, 2020).

Important elements in smuggling are a) the aim of making a profit; b) bringing or order people, individually or in groups; c) leaving or entering Indonesian Territory; d) with the situation; do not have legal rights/valid or fake documents/or without travel documents. Smuggling in the law, referring to Bassiouni, emphasizes illegal entry or entry. Valid documents are an important issue in smuggling. The sanctions vary; unprocedural entry or exit without going through immigration inspection and means of transport that carry transportation as a mode of smuggling are punished with an alternative crime, namely imprisonment for a maximum of 1 year or a maximum fine of 100 million. Crimes related to documents are punished with an accumulative sentence, namely a maximum of 5 years in prison and a fine of 500 million rupiah (Daud & Sopoyono, 2019).

Law in Indonesia does not make the existence of non-procedural migrant workers explicit but exists to prevent the existence of non-procedural migrant workers by making prohibitions contained in different laws, both in the Human Trafficking Law, the Immigration Law and the PPMI Law (Yuliani & Rasalwati, 2020). The three existing regulations stipulate that there are perpetrators who violate the prohibition, both individual and corporate actors. The acts regulated are varied, but in the three laws, some acts are regulated, namely providing false information, falsifying or creating fake travel documents, and entering or leaving without documents. In the Human Trafficking Law, this act is placed as part of the human trafficking act, while in the PPMI Law, the act can be a separate crime. In contrast, in the Immigration Law, it is placed either as a separate crime or a crime combined as a practice of smuggling or human trafficking.

However, since the existence of the Human Trafficking Law, the focus of the government and law enforcement has been more on handling sexual exploitation rather than looking at human trafficking in the context of labor exploitation. Before the Human Trafficking Law came into existence, Presidential Decree Number 88 of 2002 on the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Trafficking in Women and Children had also laid down the framework for human trafficking not solely in the context of prostitution but also adopted legal and illegal migrant workers children, mail-order brides, domestic servants, begging, pornography industry, drug trafficking and organ sales and other forms of exploitation.

CONCLUSION

A migrant worker is someone who looks for work outside the country intending to earn income for daily life within a time limit that has been determined following the work agreement. Every year, interest in PMI increases both procedurally and non-procedurally, resulting in increasing problems faced by PMI, such as violence, human trafficking, the death of migrant workers in destination countries, and the recruitment of undocumented or illegal workers. Non-procedural PMI placement is caused by several factors, namely low education, limited employment opportunities in the country, high levels of poverty, limited access to information/lack of public understanding about PMI placement and protection procedures, persuasion and sweet promises such as getting a high salary with a practical process, including the presence of brokers. Meanwhile, the increase in people/individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors, namely, the perpetrators receive a fairly large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, the educational conditions and knowledge of the victim/victim's family, and the victim's economic limitations. Then, several violations were committed by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI), namely: 1) Placement fees that were too high (Overcharging); 2) Falsifying the identity of Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI); and 3) Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) do not receive enough job training. Furthermore, perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement can be charged under Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning PPMI. They can also be subject to Law Number 21 of 2007 concerning the Eradication of the Crime of Human Trafficking and be subject to imprisonment or fines.

ABSTRACT

The program for placing Indonesian Migrant Workers (abbreviated as PMI) abroad is one of the efforts to overcome the problem of unemployment. The government has ~~enacted~~^{made} regulations regarding the ~~placement mechanism~~ ^{offer for placing} Indonesian migrant workers. However, there is still a non-procedural placement ~~for~~ of Indonesian migrant workers, giving rise to new problems in handling it. This ~~study~~^{research} aims to analyze the factors that encourage perpetrators to carry out the non-procedural placement of migrant workers and the application of legal sanctions for perpetrators. The research method uses ~~qualitative with a qualitative~~ normative juridical approach, which looks at problems from the study of legal materials such as books or articles that discuss research themes as references for primary and secondary legal materials. The data analysis technique used ~~was~~ descriptive analysis. The results of this research show that the increase in people or individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors; namely, the perpetrators receive a relatively large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, the educational conditions and knowledge of the victim or victim's family, and the victim's economic limitations. Perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement can be charged, apart from Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning PPMI, ~~which they~~ can also be subject to Law Number 21 of 2007 concerning the Eradication of Criminal Acts of Trafficking in Persons (~~abbreviated as~~ PTPPO), which is subject to legal sanctions of imprisonment or fines.

INTRODUCTION

Law is understood as a coercive order; ~~that which~~ applies sanctions in the form of coercive actions. The provisions explaining ~~the law in~~ the law will appear as a statement that under certain conditions, which are also determined by that legal order, specific coercive actions are also determined by that order. The problem of migrant workers ~~also~~ continues to influence Indonesia's employment conditions, primarily related to the management, placement, and protection of migrant workers abroad. The government's way to reduce the unemployment rate is ~~to by~~ ^{placing} workers abroad as Indonesian migrant workers -(Muthia, 2020). Several problems are on the government's agenda that must be resolved; among these problems are the lack of job opportunities, the low economic level of society, and the low competitiveness of Indonesian migrant workers; these are serious problems that must be resolved -(Sulaksono, 2018). To solve existing problems, it is hoped that sending migrant workers will be an alternative solution ~~to the problem~~. On ~~the~~ one hand, remittances are an essential indicator ~~off~~ for the economy of migrant worker families in ~~the migrant~~ ^{workers'} ~~worker's~~ home villages.

The high number of Indonesian citizens interested in becoming migrant workers, supported by the ~~above~~ ^{above} factors, means that many agencies providing migration work are starting to emerge -(Bulan, 2021). On the other hand, the emergence of migrant job providers ~~currently~~ cannot be trusted ~~by with~~ 100% safety of their workers. The broker agents that are emerging at the moment are taking advantage of the situation of high demand for workers with worrying economic conditions and the lack of education of prospective migration workers, so that prospective migration workers prefer to take shortcuts by using brokers rather than ~~taking~~ training first ~~to be able~~ to meet the requirements ~~of by~~ the provisions as PMI-(Febrianti & Afifah, 2023).

The large number of crimes that occur among migrant workers is a risk ~~for~~ the creation of non-procedural migration workers by broker agents, who bring workers without going through proper procedures-(Indrayani Arief, 2021). Risks such as fraud, violence, exploitation, human smuggling, human trafficking, and even murder can occur among Indonesian migrant workers who are victims of non-compliance with the requirements and procedures set out in the laws in force in Indonesia-(Farbenblum et al., 2013).

The ~~number~~~~presence~~ of irregular migrant workers is predicted to be quite large. The International Organization for Migration reports that there are ~~approximately around~~ 58 million irregular ~~or~~ undocumented migrant workers. They are considered 'illegal' migrant workers because of several conditions, such as entering a country not by the procedures established by immigration law in that country, they are in a country but exceeding the period permitted by a visa, and travel document (passport) is no longer valid, or because they work without being registered as workers by labor law in a foreign country-(Soulina & Yovani, 2020). ~~These~~~~This~~ data ~~are~~~~is~~ relatively high; at least a third of the world's migrant worker population reaches 150.3 million-(Kusdarini et al., 2021).

Indonesia contributes data on non-regular migrant workers at ~~the~~ global level. The World Bank notes that ~~nine~~~~9~~ million Indonesian migrant workers work abroad, with the main destinations being Malaysia, Saudi Arabia, China, Hong Kong, and Singapore, where 48% of Indonesian Migrant Workers migrate non-procedurally. It is estimated that 70 percent of non-procedural migrant workers are women. Indonesia is the second largest country in Southeast Asia after the Philippines, with ~~a sender of~~ more than 25 migrant workers. It can be seen from data from the Indonesian Migrant Worker Protection Agency (~~abbreviated as~~ BP2MI), ~~which that~~ started ~~ed~~ from early January to September 2022, ~~that~~ there have been 122,870 people ~~placed~~ in various countries-(Noor, 2023). The data obtained differs significantly from previous years, especially during the COVID-19 pandemic, when ~~re~~ sending migrant workers was very limited. The average number of people currently registered ~~ing~~ ~~is~~~~are~~ graduates ~~of from~~ Senior High Schools (SMA).

The increasing number of interested migrant workers also benefits the government because it can help reduce the number of unemployed people and increase ~~the amount of~~ foreign exchange. Prospective migrant workers think ~~that~~ working abroad is profitable because they ~~receive~~~~get~~ much better wages than ~~they do~~ in Indonesia. However, they ~~must consider~~~~need~~ ~~to think about~~ the high risks ~~that~~ they will experience-(Dananjaya, 2020). The risks that will be experienced include violence, human trafficking, sexual exploitation, unpaid wages according to ~~the~~ work agreements, and very long working hours.

Based on the risks experienced by migrant workers, BP2MI has received complaints from Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) in various countries regarding the problems they experienced while working abroad. Currently, BP2MI has notified PMI complaints from January to September 2022, namely from Saudi Arabia as much as 29.5% with a total of 50 complaints, Malaysia as much as 16.5% with a total of 28 complaints, Taiwan as much as 10.6% with ~~the number of~~ 18 complaints, the UAE as much as 7% with ~~a total of~~ 12 complaints, Poland as much as 6% with ~~a total of~~ 10 complaints, and ~~other countries as~~ ~~many~~~~much~~ as 30.4% with ~~a total of~~ 51 complaints. The complaints consisted of 102 illegal migrant workers, 83 complaints about unpaid salaries, 93 complaints of deaths in the destination country, 13 complaints of violence, and ~~also~~ 40 ~~complaints~~~~people~~ of human trafficking. Of the many complaints received, they ~~we~~~~are~~ legal workers, or what could be called non-procedural workers. This is closely related to ~~the~~ PMI's departure until they arrive at the destination country, where they are trapped in the game between brokers (Nuraeny, 2023).

Brokers have routes across various countries that are easy to travel; thus, so they can convince local people to manage departures to work abroad. It has been regulated in Article 72 letter (b) of Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the prohibition of placement in closed countries, and prospective migrant workers must be placed in countries by the work agreement. This has also been regulated, as in Article 71 of the Law Number 18 of 2017 (Dewi et al., 2021). Prospective migrant workers whose departure is illegal can still leave because they use fake documents prepared by that brokers from migrant worker-sending companies have prepared. Non-procedural migrant workers are very vulnerable to dangerous risks such as violence, human trafficking, and sexual exploitation, not to mention if they work for a company abroad. There is an inspection of the data collection of their citizens, which the authorities can arrest non-procedural migrant workers—the persons responsible for collecting resident data (Zamhir et al., 2023). It should be remembered that non-procedural migrant workers do not have official documents; therefore, so for those who experience violence or other risks abroad, the Indonesian government finds it very difficult to provide legal protection to non-procedural migrant workers (Puanandini, 2020). This differs from legal or procedural migrant workers; if they experience violence or have their rights confiscated by their employers, they will receive legal protection under by Article 7 of Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers.

To protect Indonesian migrant workers abroad, the government issued Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers and various other regulations that regulate the placement mechanism for Indonesian migrant workers. This is done to protect migrant workers from becoming victims of human trafficking, victims of violence, and victims of other crimes. Despite this, the fact is that there are still many placements of Indonesian migrant workers who that do are carried out without fulfilling the procedures set out in statutory regulations. This has become the government's concern, and it is trying to provide a deterrent effect to perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement. Based on the problems above, researchers are interested in studying more deeply regarding law enforcement for perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement by limiting it to what factors support perpetrators into carrying out non-procedural PMI placement, and how legal sanctions are applied to perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement in Indonesia.

METHOD

The method used in this research is a normative juridical research method with descriptive-analytical research specifications, namely, studying and analyzing the non-procedural sending of Indonesian migrant workers and providing an objective picture relating to law enforcement against perpetrators of criminal acts that protecting Indonesian migrant workers linked to human trafficking. Based on Law No. Number 18 of 2017 and Law No. 21 of 2007. This research uses secondary data, including primary legal materials, secondary legal materials, and tertiary legal materials, namely statutory regulations, books, scientific articles, and data taken from websites/the websites/internet Internet, etc. Library The data research collection waste technique used as the data collection is library technique research.

RESULT AND DISCUSSIONS

Factors and Violations of Non-Procedural Placement of Indonesian Migrant Workers

The large population is disproportionate to the available jobs, which causes poverty and the inability to meet their living needs and livelihoods, thus requiring most Indonesian people to move to other countries to get work abroad (Firdaus & Simangunsong, 2023). Migration of workers is an essential economic activity for sending and receiving countries. The high migration flow in this region is due caused to by countries that are economically dependent on migrant workers. Receiving countries are dependent on migrant workers for economic the mobilization ~~of the economy~~, which can be seen from the high number of migrant workers in the country (Muthia, 2020).

The ~~yearly~~ increase in Indonesian citizens becoming migrant workers and looking for work abroad in both the formal and informal sectors ~~from year to year~~ is due to various reasons, including domestic unemployment, insufficient domestic employment opportunities, disparities in global ~~and~~ regional economic growth, advances in transportation technology and information, ~~and~~ the right to work abroad. The pull factor that exists abroad in the form of higher wages makes workers ~~more~~ interested in working abroad. Working abroad has a positive side, namely, overcoming some ~~of the~~ unemployment problems in the country. On the other hand, there is a negative side in the form of the risk of possible inhumane treatment of PMI (Febrianti & Afifah, 2023).

Data on ~~the~~ placements of Indonesian Migrant Workers up to June 2023 illustrates that the number of placements of Indonesian Migrant Workers has increased over the last two years; namely, in June 2023, placements reached 20,388; in June 2022, there were 15,700 placements; ~~and~~ in June 2021, there were 6,661 placements. In June 2023, the majority of Indonesian Migrant Workers were placed in the formal sector, with 11,645 placements (55%), while ~~in the informal sector~~, 8,743 placements (45%) ~~were placed in the informal sector~~ (Firdaus & Simangunsong, 2023).

Based on the G to G Program placement scheme (PMI placement with the ~~g~~ Government ~~to g~~ Government scheme through the Indonesian Migrant Worker Protection Agency (BP2MI)), the number of Indonesian Migrant Workers placed by BP2MI in June 2023 was 963 placements, with ~~details of~~ 652 placements to South Korea, 311 placements to Japan in June 2023, and 0 placements to Germany. Meanwhile, based on the P-to-P placement scheme (PMI placement with a ~~p~~ Private ~~to p~~ Private or company-to-company scheme. This placement is carried out by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI) with the ~~a~~ Agency in the destination country. Previously, P3MI was known as PJTKI or PPTKIS); P3MI placed 15,301 Indonesian Migrant Workers. Based on the Individual Placement Scheme, there ~~were~~ 1,848 placements. Based on the Placement Scheme for the Company's Own Benefits (~~abbreviated as~~ UKPS), there ~~were~~ 17 placements. Complaint data increased in June 2023 compared ~~with~~ June 2021 and 2022. Most complaints in June 2023 came from Saudi Arabia, Malaysia, ~~and~~ Hong Kong, ~~whereas while~~ West Java and Central Java were the provinces with the highest complaints in June 2023. The most common complaints include Indonesian Migrant Workers wanting to be repatriated and placement costs ~~that exceeding~~ the fee structure.

The stages of PMI placement, as regulated in Article 9 of Government Regulation Number 10 of 2020, often need to be followed according to the ~~se~~ rules. This is what is called non-procedural PMI placement, whose victims have the possibility of becoming victims of human trafficking, ~~victims of~~ violence, or ~~victims of~~ other crimes. ~~The n~~ Non-procedural placement of migrant workers is the placement of Indonesian citizens who work abroad without going through correct PMI placement procedures by applicable laws and legal provisions, including falsifying documents and manipulating prospective PMI data, incomplete documents, and ignoring procedures and mechanisms. ~~The~~ PMI placement does not use a work visa.

The rise in non-procedural PMI placements is caused by several factors, ~~such as namely~~ low education, limited job opportunities in the country, high levels of poverty, limited access to information/lack of public understanding about PMI placement and protection procedures, persuasion, ~~and~~ sweet promises such as ~~obtaining getting~~ high salaries with a practical process, including the presence of brokers. The limited access to information, which results in a need for more public understanding regarding procedures for departure, placement, and protection of PMI, impacts the emergence of many brokers or individuals who are ready to take care of non-procedural PMI through inappropriate procedures. ~~Therefore~~ So, PMI candidates ~~must need~~ to be registered in the Computerized Overseas Workforce System (~~abbreviated as~~ SISKOKTKLN).

The increase in people/individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors; namely, the perpetrators receive a relatively large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, ~~the~~ educational conditions, and knowledge of victims/victims' families who are not aware of the placement. PMI, the victim's economic limitation, means that they are easily persuaded and promised significant wages by the perpetrator.

~~There were~~ several violations were committed by the Private Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (~~abbreviated as~~ PPTKIS), which has now changed its name to the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (~~abbreviated as~~ P3MI), ~~and the factors that caused the violations include:~~

1. Placement Fees that are Too High (~~o~~Overcharging). The Minister of Manpower and Transmigration Regulation Number 14/MEN /X/2010 regulates the burden of the placement costs that Migrant Workers must bear, including identity documents, health checks, psychology, job training, and work competency certification. ~~Some~~ Other costs are borne by Indonesian Migrant Worker (PMI) service users. Apart from these costs, ~~migrant~~ other ~~worker~~ costs must ~~bear~~ be borne ~~other by migrant costs~~ workers, ~~that which~~ are regulated by a ministerial decree. Placement fees ~~were have been~~ regulated in various Ministerial Decrees, as a reference for the placement of Indonesian migrant workers abroad. The mechanism for paying placement fees for migrant workers has been criticized because ~~the~~ placement fees are too high. The government's support for the fate of migrant workers, especially Indonesian migrant workers, has not been optimally implemented ~~optimally~~. ~~However, m~~ Many problems still need to be addressed ~~accommodated~~. Case data from the Indonesian Migrant Workers Union (SBMI) from 2015 to 2017 showed 1,501 complaints from various countries. The biggest complaints ~~were is~~ related to expensive fees or overcharging. The cause of Overcharging is that Migrant Workers have signed the placement fee or Cost Structure (CS), but PPTKIS or P3MI still ask for additional money from prospective Migrant Workers (PMI) because the CS fee is ~~lower~~ less. ~~By~~ In contrast, in reality, the CS fee by the Regulation of the Minister of Manpower and Transmigration Number 14/MEN/X/2010 is no longer relevant. There is no synchronization with other regulations, such as the Minister of Health's regulations regarding medical checkups and immigration regulations regarding ~~making~~ passports, whereas in the CS, medical fees and passports are no longer covered by these other regulations.
2. Falsification of ~~Falsifying~~ the Identity of Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI). The act of forgery is only known in advanced societies, where specific data facilitates ~~the relations~~ flow of relations in society. Identity falsification/manipulation consists of two syllables: ~~identity falsification/manipulation~~. Manipulation is a loan word originating ~~in from~~ English: manipulation, which means misuse or misappropriation. In 2020, the Criminal Investigation Agency (~~abbreviated as~~ Bareskrim) handled cases related to Migrant Worker Identity Falsification carried out by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI), which did not comply with procedures for recruiting prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI). Of ~~these~~ some of them, there are many prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (CPMI) or Prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (CTKI) who are not yet sufficiently old ~~enough~~. However, in some PPTKIS/P3MI, many use services to change the age of ~~in the~~ E-KTP and family cards, which is one of the requirements for making a pPassport. ~~In~~ Apart from ~~addition that~~, in the maritime sector, especially for fisheries, whether placed domestically or abroad, many companies use the services of individuals or what we could call "brokers" to create seaman's books and other skills certificates in a way that is against the law or illegal.

3. Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) do not receive ~~sufficient~~enough job training. Article 12, paragraph 1 of Law Number 13 of 2003 states that employers are responsible for providing job training to improve the competence of ~~their~~ workers. However, for entrepreneurs who meet the requirements regulated by the Minister of Manpower's ~~decision~~, increasing worker competency is an obligation according to Article 12, paragraph 2 of Law Number 13 of 2003. PPTKIS/P3MI are obliged to register with CPMI to ~~take-participate~~ in work competency training ~~underby~~ Article 23 of the Regulation Minister Number 22 of 2014. However, in reality, many companies, in order to make a profit with little capital and a short time, training programs to support PMI competency often do not go through the appropriate channels in making CPMI competency certificates; among these cases, CPMI will be sent to the Destination Country; for example, in Taiwan, the CPMI should take part in job and language training, but in reality, the CPMI can leave for the destination country in a short time of around one week. ~~Therefore~~So, from this case example, it can be seen that CPMI or CPTKI cannot learn job and language training in one week because, judging from the CPMI's educational strata, the average is only an elementary school graduate. ~~Thus~~So, ~~it that was became~~ one of the factors that caused violence against CPMI and CTKI (Eddyono, 2021).

The ~~reason~~cause ~~for~~of this is the lack of supervision from the government, which resulted in PPTKIS/P3MI being naughty in sending CPMI and CPTKI, who still had not received ~~sufficient~~enough training abroad to meet the PPTKIS/P3MI's annual targets.

Regulations and Application of Legal Sanctions for Perpetrators of Non-Procedural Delivery of Indonesian Migrant Workers Linked to Human Trafficking

Indonesia has had special regulations regarding PMI since Law No. 34 of 2004 concerning the Placement and Protection of Indonesian Workers Abroad (abbreviated as UU PPTKILN). This ~~law~~ is the first law to specifically regulate migrant workers ~~specifically~~. Although the existence of this law was pushed for ~~its existence~~ by non-governmental organizations to overcome the violence and exploitation experienced by migrant workers, especially women, the ratification of this law received criticism, considering that its contents were deemed to prioritize the process of placing PMIs rather than their protection. The existence ~~of the law~~ and ~~the~~ implementation of ~~the~~is law are not considered ~~not~~ to help women who are non-regular migrant workers (Barid et al., 2022).

This law provides criminal regulations for parties ~~that who~~ place migrant workers atto work without permission. This law also criminalizes people who place prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (~~abbreviated as~~ TKI) in positions or places of work that are contrary to human values and decency. Other crimes that are also regulated in this law include manipulating exam results, not guaranteeing health insurance, the process of transferring Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Implementation Permits (abbreviated as SIPPTKI) and TKI Mobilization Permits, and placing TKI without documents. ~~Even-Although~~ it does not mention the term illegal undocumented or irregular migrant workers, this article could be a reference point for the non-procedural placement of female migrant workers. However, not all ~~of the~~ above acts are crimes. However, some are called violations, namely, the placement of TKI without written permission and the placement of TKI or TKI without a Foreign Worker Card (abbreviated as KTKLN).

The 2017 PPMI Law replaced ~~the existence of~~ the PPTKILN Law. The 2017 PPMI Law defines migrant workers without distinguishing between procedural ~~and~~ non-procedural statuses. ~~In this law~~, Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) are stated as follows: "every Indonesian citizen who will, is, or has done work for wages outside the territory of the Republic of Indonesia". The scope of the PMI in question is threefold: a) Indonesian Migrant Workers who work for legal entity employers; b) Indonesian Migrant Workers who work for individual or household employers; and c) ~~Seafarers and fisheries sailors~~.

This law does not differentiate between PMI status, which includes procedural and non-procedural, as stated in the Migrant Workers Convention (1990), ratified in 2012. This lack of distinction does not necessarily mean that the position of PMI with procedural and non-procedural status es is different. Even in the process of forming the PPMI Law, it was found that members of the Community Representative Council (~~abbreviated as~~ DPR) did not want to touch on the issue of non-procedural migrant workers, ase ~~considering that~~ they considered the discussion of non-procedural PMI to be very complex-(Tan & Shahrullah, 2017). According to them, it would be unwise to ~~expressly~~ open protection expressly because it is feared that it will increase the number of non-procedural PMIs. At that time, DPR members focused on eliminating non-procedural PMI, as this effort was accommodated in the PPMI Law.

The protection regulations for PMI in this law emphasize protection before, during, and after work. In this context, work is emphasized ase ~~on~~ doing work in a ~~the~~ country where you work. From the start, protection has been emphasized by protecting the administrative form, namely, the procurement of complete and valid work documents and determining working ~~conditions and~~ conditions. This initial protection process forms ~~becomes~~ the basis for the subsequent protection.

Regarding regulations regarding prohibitions and punishments, the law has similarities and differences from those regulated by the PPTKILN Law. The PPMI Law expands the subject of punishment not limited to companies that place PMI but includes individuals and corporations related to 1) ~~p~~Prohibition of transferring or reassigning PMI Delivery Permits; 2) ~~p~~Prohibition of placing PMI candidates who do not meet health and psychological requirements; ~~and~~ 3) Prohibition of PMI placements that are not by the work agreement. Another difference is that the PPMI Law emphasizes the prohibition of placements, ~~in~~ ~~contras~~~~try~~ to statutory regulations. At the same time, the PPTKILN Law has three frameworks: prohibiting placements ~~that are~~ contrary to humanity, moral norms, and statutory regulations (Eddyono, 2021).

Apart from that, this law also introduces new prohibitions, which include: a) ~~p~~Providing incorrect information in filling out each document required in the migration process; b) Placement that is not by the work agreement is detrimental; c) Placement to certain countries ~~that which~~ are declared closed for placement; d) PMI placement without a PMI Handover Permit; e) Placement of PMI without going to a country where there is no agreement between the Republic of Indonesia and that country; ~~and e~~) does not have a social or insurance system that protects foreign workers.

The PPMI Law also makes government officials legal subjects who can be punished for all types of crimes above, with an emphasis on ~~the~~ abuse of their power. Efforts to eliminate non-regular PMI can be seen from the numerous prohibitions contained in this law. However, the target of the PPMI Law covers all parties, including ~~the~~ PMI, who provide incorrect information while filling out ~~the~~ documents. ~~In~~~~Apart from~~ ~~addition~~~~that~~, the PPMI Law also decriminalizes several acts prohibited in the PPTKILN Law, which include: a) Placement of PMI candidates who do not have a Foreign Worker Card (abbreviated as KTKLN); b) Employing PMI candidates who are currently undergoing education and training; ~~and~~ c) Detention of PMI departures who do not meet the document requirements.

Since the existence of Law No. 21 of 2007 concerning Human Trafficking, ~~it the law~~ should be considered necessary for protecting female migrant workers who experience exploitation or fraud during the migration process. This law combines several types of human trafficking ~~in which~~ where human trafficking aims to exploit a person/group of people. Exploitation in the context of human trafficking includes a) ~~s~~Sexual exploitation in the form of prostitution or sexual exploitation; b) ~~e~~Exploitation or use of a person's energy to work in the form of forced service, slavery, or practices similar to slavery, oppression including physical use of a person; ~~and~~ c) ~~e~~Exploitation of reproductive organs ~~and~~; transplantation of organs and/or body tissue of a person (Mihardi, 2020).

This exploitation is ~~performed~~~~done~~ to obtain benefits from the person being exploited through material or immaterial benefits. Law No. 21 of 2007 clearly states that the various exploitations carried out above are crimes ~~in which~~ where perpetrators can be punished with criminal penalties. Punishment includes ~~people who~~: a) Recruit, transport, harbor, send, transfer, or receive someone; b) ~~b~~By threat of violence, use of force, kidnapping, confinement, forgery, fraud, abuse of power or vulnerable position, debt bondage, or providing payments or benefits; c) ~~d~~Despite obtaining the consent of the person who has control over another person; d) ~~f~~For exploitative purposes (Vicky & Rahaditya, 2022).

This law also punishes officials who abuse their powers, resulting in trafficking crimes. In the context of non-procedural migrant workers, the practice of human trafficking often occurs ~~through~~ using falsifying identities and fraud, which is often carried out with the lure or promise of good work or wages and working conditions that will be provided (Grange, 2005).

Abuse or vulnerable positions often occur, such as being provided with funds or bailed out to finance the document processing and placement process. As shown in the example table below:

Table 2 Prohibitions and Sanctions Related to the Opportunity for Non-Procedural Migrant Workers based on Law No. 21 of 2007

8	Consent of victims of human trafficking does not eliminate prosecution for criminal acts of human trafficking (Article 26)
9	The perpetrator of the criminal act of trafficking in persons loses his right to collect debts or other agreements against the victim if the debt or other agreement is used to exploit the victim (Article 27)

Law no. 6 of 2011 concerning ~~i~~mmigration regulates procedures for crossing Indonesian borders, the requirements for crossing Indonesian borders, including ~~the~~ documents required to be owned, the process of obtaining records, and the authority of ~~i~~mmigration, including revoking travel documents. In the context of women's non-regular migrant workers, there are regulations regarding preventive measures, repressive measures, and criminal regulations for attempts to smuggle and trade ~~in~~ people across national borders.

Punishment is regulated in this law for immigration crimes, including transnational crimes, ~~su~~which ~~as~~include smuggling and trafficking ~~in persons~~. Immigration crimes ~~that are~~ connected to the issue of women non-regular migrant workers include unprocedural entry or exit without going through an immigration inspection (Article 113). This law elaborates many crimes related to travel documents, which include (Articles 123-130) including making fake or falsifying travel documents, Visas or Entry Certificates, or Stay Permits: a) using fake or falsified Travel Documents; b) providing invalid data or incorrect information to obtain Travel Documents; c) have or use 2 (two) or more Republic of Indonesia Travel Documents of the same type and all of them are still valid; d) falsify or create false Travel Documents; e) keeping false or falsified Travel Documents; f) destroy, change, add, reduce, or remove, either in whole or in part, the information or stamps contained in the Travel Document; ~~and~~ and g) control other people's travel documents (Anggreini & Herlina, 2019).

Some of the ~~above~~ prohibitions also emphasize crimes committed ~~to~~for oneself or others. This means that this law could ~~enforce~~ ~~ensnare~~ female non-regular migrant workers ~~on~~about travel documents or other parties who hold migrant worker travel documents (Khalid & Savirah, 2022). Regarding cross-border smuggling crimes, the Immigration Law regulates the criminal act of smuggling as an act aimed at seeking profit, either directly or indirectly, for oneself or another person by bringing a person or group of people, ~~whether~~ organized or unorganized, or ordering another person to bring a person or group of people, whether organized or unorganized, into the Indonesian Territory or out of the Indonesian Territory and/or into the ~~T~~erritory of another country, where the person does not have the right to enter the ~~T~~erritory legally, either by using valid documents, ~~or~~ fake documents, or without using Travel Documents (Mahardika & Wicaksono, 2020).

Important elements in smuggling are a) the aim of making a profit; b) bringing or ordering people, individually or in groups; c) leaving or entering Indonesian Territory; d) with the situation; ~~and d) do not have~~ legal rights/valid or fake documents/or without travel documents. Smuggling in the law, referring to Bassiouni, emphasizes illegal ~~entry or~~ entry. Valid documents are ~~an~~ important ~~issue~~ in smuggling. The sanctions vary; ~~unprocedural entry or exit without going through immigration inspection and means of transport that carry transportation as a mode of smuggling are punished with an alternative crime, namely imprisonment for a maximum of one+ year or a maximum fine of 100 million. Crimes related to documents are punished with an accumulative sentence, namely, a maximum of five5 years in prison and a fine of 500 million rupiah~~ (Daud & Sopoyono, 2019).

Law in Indonesia does not make the existence of non-procedural migrant workers explicit but ~~exists to prevent~~ the existence of non-procedural migrant workers by making prohibitions contained in different laws, both in the Human Trafficking Law, the Immigration Law and the PPMI Law-(Yuliani & Rasalwati, 2020). The three existing regulations stipulate that ~~there are~~ perpetrators ~~who~~ violate the prohibition ~~of~~; both individual and corporate actors. The acts regulated are varied, but in the three laws, some acts are regulated, namely, providing false information, falsifying or creating fake travel documents, and entering or leaving without documents. In the Human Trafficking Law, this act is placed as part of the human trafficking act, ~~whereas~~ while in the PPMI Law, the act can be a separate crime. In contrast, in the Immigration Law, it is placed either as a separate crime or a crime combined ~~with~~ as a practice of smuggling or human trafficking.

However, since the existence of the Human Trafficking Law, the focus of the government and law enforcement has been more on handling sexual exploitation rather than ~~on looking at~~ human trafficking in the context of labor exploitation. Before the Human Trafficking Law came into existence, Presidential Decree Number 88 of 2002 on the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Trafficking in Women and Children ~~had~~ also laid down the framework for human trafficking not ~~only~~~~solely~~ in the context of prostitution, but also adopted legal and illegal migrant workers' children, mail-order brides, domestic servants, begging, pornography~~-industry~~, drug trafficking, ~~and~~ organ sales, and other forms of exploitation.

CONCLUSION

A migrant worker is someone who looks for work outside the country intending to earn income for daily life within a time limit ~~that has been~~ determined following the work agreement. Every year, interest in PMI increases both procedurally and non-procedurally, resulting in increasing problems faced by PMI, such as violence, human trafficking, the death of migrant workers in destination countries, and the recruitment of undocumented or illegal workers. Non-procedural PMI placement is caused by several factors, ~~such as~~~~namely~~ low education, limited employment opportunities in the country, high levels of poverty, limited access to information/lack of public understanding ~~of about~~ PMI placement and protection procedures, persuasion, and sweet promises such as getting a high salary with a practical process, including the presence of brokers. Meanwhile, the increase in people/individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors; namely, the perpetrators receive a fairly large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, the educational conditions and knowledge of the victim's/victim's family, and the victim's economic limitations. ~~Then~~, ~~S~~ several violations were committed by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI), namely: 1) Placement fees that were too high (~~o~~~~o~~vercharging); 2) ~~f~~alsifying the identity of Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI); and 3) Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) do not receive enough job training. Furthermore, perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placements can be charged under Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning PPMI. They can also be subject to Law Number 21 of 2007 concerning the Eradication of the Crime of Human Trafficking and ~~be subject to~~ imprisonment or fines.

ABSTRACT

The program for placing Indonesian Migrant Workers abroad is one of the efforts to overcome the problem of unemployment. The government has enacted regulations regarding the placement of Indonesian migrant workers. However, there is still a non-procedural placement for Indonesian migrant workers, giving rise to new problems in handling it. This study aims to analyze the factors that encourage perpetrators to carry out the non-procedural placement of migrant workers and the application of legal sanctions for perpetrators. The research method uses a qualitative normative juridical approach, which looks at problems from the study of legal materials such as books or articles that discuss research themes as references for primary and secondary legal materials. The data analysis technique used d was descriptive analysis. The results of this research show that the increase in people or individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors; namely, the perpetrators receive a relatively large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, the educational conditions and knowledge of the victim or victim's family, and the victim's economic limitations. Perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement can be charged, apart from Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning PPMI, which can also be subject to Law Number 21 of 2007 concerning the Eradication of Criminal Acts of Trafficking in Persons (PTPP), which is subject to legal sanctions of imprisonment or fines.

INTRODUCTION

Law is understood as a coercive order; that applies sanctions in the form of coercive actions. The provisions explaining the law will appear as a statement that under certain conditions, which are also determined by that legal order, specific coercive actions are also determined by that order. The problem of migrant workers continues to influence Indonesia's employment conditions, primarily related to the management, placement, and protection of migrant workers abroad. The government's way to reduce the unemployment rate is to place workers abroad as Indonesian migrant workers -(Muthia, 2020). Several problems are on the government's agenda that must be resolved; among these problems are the lack of job opportunities, the low economic level of society, and the low competitiveness of Indonesian migrant workers; these are serious problems that must be resolved -(Sulaksono, 2018). To solve existing problems, it is hoped that sending migrant workers will be an alternative solution. On one hand, remittances are an essential indicator of the economy of migrant worker families in migrant workers' home villages.

The high number of Indonesian citizens interested in becoming migrant workers, supported by the above factors, means that many agencies providing migration work are starting to emerge (Bulan, 2021). On the other hand, the emergence of migrant job providers cannot be trusted by the 100% safety of their workers. The broker agents that are emerging at the moment are taking advantage of the situation of high demand for workers with worrying economic conditions and the lack of education of prospective migration workers so that prospective migration workers prefer to take shortcuts by using brokers rather than training first to meet the requirements of the provisions as PMI -(Febrianti & Afifah, 2023).

The large number of crimes that occur among migrant workers is a risk foref the creation of non-procedural migration workers by broker agents, who bring workers without going through proper procedures -(Indrayani Arief, 2021). Risks such as fraud, violence, exploitation, human smuggling, human trafficking, and even murder can occur among Indonesian migrant workers who are victims of non-compliance with the requirements and procedures set out in the laws in force in Indonesia -(Farbenblum et al., 2013).

The number of irregular migrant workers is predicted to be quite large. The International Organization for Migration reports that there are approximately 58 million irregular or /undocumented migrant workers. They are considered 'illegal' migrant workers because of several conditions, such as entering a country not by the procedures established by immigration law in that country, they are in a country but exceeding the period permitted by a visa, and travel document (passport) is no longer valid, or because they work without being registered as workers by labor law in a foreign country -(Soulina & Yovani, 2020). These data are relatively high; at least a third of the world's migrant worker population reaches 150.3 million -(Kusdarini et al., 2021).

Indonesia contributes data on non-regular migrant workers at a global level. The World Bank notes that nine million Indonesian migrant workers work abroad, with the main destinations being Malaysia, Saudi Arabia, China, Hong Kong, and Singapore, where 48% of Indonesian Migrant Workers migrate non-procedurally. It is estimated that 70 percent of non-procedural migrant workers are women. Indonesia is the second largest country in Southeast Asia after the Philippines, with more than 25 migrant workers. It can be seen from data from the Indonesian Migrant Worker Protection Agency (BP2MI), which started from early January to September 2022, that there have been 122,870 people in various countries -(Noor, 2023). The data obtained differ significantly from previous years, especially during the COVID-19 pandemic, when sending migrant workers was very limited. The average number of people currently registered is graduates of Senior High Schools (SMA).

The increasing number of interested migrant workers also benefits the government because it can help reduce the number of unemployed people and increase foreign exchange. Prospective migrant workers think that working abroad is profitable because they receive much better wages than they do in Indonesia. However, they must consider the high risks that they will experience (Dananjaya, 2020). The risks that will be experienced include violence, human trafficking, sexual exploitation, unpaid wages according to work agreements, and very long working hours.

Based on the risks experienced by migrant workers, BP2MI has received complaints from Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) in various countries regarding the problems they experienced while working abroad. Currently, BP2MI has notified PMI complaints from January to September 2022, namely from Saudi Arabia as much as 29.5% with a total of 50 complaints, Malaysia as much as 16.5% with a total of 28 complaints, Taiwan as much as 10.6% with 18 complaints, the UAE as much as 7% with 12 complaints, Poland as much as 6% with 10 complaints, and as many as 30.4% with 51 complaints. The complaints consisted of 102 illegal migrant workers, 83 complaints about unpaid salaries, 93 complaints of deaths in the destination country, 13 complaints of violence, and 40 complaints of human trafficking. Of the many complaints received, they were legal workers, or what could be called non-procedural workers. This is closely related to the PMI's departure until they arrive at the destination country, where they are trapped in the game between brokers (Nuraeny, 2023).

Brokers have routes across various countries that are easy to travel; thus, they can convince local people to manage departures to work abroad. It has been regulated in Article 72 (b) of Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the prohibition of placement in closed countries, and prospective migrant workers must be placed in countries by the work agreement. This has also been regulated, as in Article 71 of Law Number 18 of 2017 –(Dewi et al., 2021). Prospective migrant workers whose departure is illegal can still leave because they use fake documents prepared by brokers from migrant worker-sending companies. Non-procedural migrant workers are vulnerable to dangerous risks such as violence, human trafficking, and sexual exploitation, not to mention if they work abroad. There is an inspection of the data collection of their citizens, which can arrest non-procedural migrant workers—the persons responsible for collecting resident data –(Zamhir et al., 2023). It should be remembered that non-procedural migrant workers do not have official documents; therefore, for those who experience violence or other risks abroad, the Indonesian government finds it very difficult to provide legal protection to non-procedural migrant workers (Puanandini, 2020). This differs from legal or procedural migrant workers; if they experience violence or have their rights confiscated by their employers, they will receive legal protection under Article 7 of Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers.

To protect Indonesian migrant workers abroad, the government issued Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers and various other regulations that regulate the placement mechanism for Indonesian migrant workers. This is done to protect migrant workers from becoming victims of human trafficking, violence, and other crimes. Despite this, there are still many Indonesian migrant workers who do not fulfill the procedures set out in statutory regulations. This has become the government's concern, and it is trying to provide a deterrent effect to perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement. Based on the problems above, researchers are interested in studying law enforcement for perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement by limiting it to what factors support perpetrators in carrying out non-procedural PMI placement, and how legal sanctions are applied to perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement in Indonesia.

METHOD

The method used in this research is a normative juridical research method with descriptive-analytical research specifications, namely, studying and analyzing the non-procedural sending of Indonesian migrant workers and providing an objective picture relating to law enforcement against perpetrators of criminal acts that protect Indonesian migrant workers linked to human trafficking. Based on Law No. 18 of 2017 and Law No. 21 of 2007. This research uses secondary data, including primary legal materials, secondary legal materials, and tertiary legal materials, namely statutory regulations, books, scientific articles, and data taken from websites/the Internet. Library research was used as the data-collection technique.

RESULT AND DISCUSSIONS

Factors and Violations of Non-Procedural Placement of Indonesian Migrant Workers

The large population is disproportionate to available jobs, which causes poverty and the inability to meet their living needs and livelihoods, thus requiring most Indonesian people to move to other countries to get work abroad (Firdaus & Simangunsong, 2023). Migration of workers is an essential economic activity for sending and receiving countries. The high migration flow in this region is due to countries that are economically dependent on migrant workers. Receiving countries are dependent on migrant workers for economic mobilization, which can be seen from the high number of migrant workers in the country -(Muthia, 2020).

The yearly increase in Indonesian citizens becoming migrant workers and looking for work abroad in both the formal and informal sectors is due to various reasons, including domestic unemployment, insufficient domestic employment opportunities, disparities in global and regional economic growth, advances in transportation technology and information, and the right to work abroad. The pull factor that exists abroad in the form of higher wages makes workers more interested in working abroad. Working abroad has a positive side, namely, overcoming some unemployment problems in the country. On the other hand, there is a negative side in the form of the risk of possible inhumane treatment of PMI -(Febrianti & Afifah, 2023).

Data on the placements of Indonesian Migrant Workers up to June 2023 illustrate that the number of placements of Indonesian Migrant Workers has increased over the last two years; namely, in June 2023, placements reached 20,388; in June 2022, there were 15,700 placements; and in June 2021, there were 6,661 placements. In June 2023, the majority of Indonesian Migrant Workers were placed in the formal sector, with 11,645 placements (55%), while 8,743 placements (45%) were placed in the informal sector (Nuraeny, 2023).

Based on the G to G Program placement scheme (PMI placement with the government-to-government scheme through the Indonesian Migrant Worker Protection Agency (BP2MI)), the number of Indonesian Migrant Workers placed by BP2MI in June 2023 was 963 placements, with 652 placements to South Korea, 311 placements to Japan in June 2023, and 0 placements to Germany. Meanwhile, based on the P-to-P placement scheme (PMI placement with a private-to-private or company-to-company scheme. This placement is carried out by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI) with the agency in the destination country. Previously, P3MI was known as PJTKI or PPTKIS). P3MI placed 15,301 Indonesian Migrant Workers. Based on the Individual Placement Scheme, there were 1,848 placements. Based on the Placement Scheme for the Company's Own Benefits (UKPS), there were 17 placements. Complaint data increased in June 2023 compared with June 2021 and 2022. Most complaints in June 2023 came from Saudi Arabia, Malaysia, and Hong Kong, whereas West Java and Central Java were the provinces with the highest complaints in June 2023. The most common complaints include Indonesian Migrant Workers wanting to be repatriated and placement costs exceeding the fee structure.

The stages of PMI placement, as regulated in Article 9 of Government Regulation Number 10 of 2020, often need to be followed according to the se rules. This is what is called non-procedural PMI placement, whose victims have the possibility of becoming victims of human trafficking, violence, or other crimes. The non-procedural placement of migrant workers is the placement of Indonesian citizens who work abroad without going through correct PMI placement procedures by applicable laws and legal provisions, including falsifying documents and manipulating prospective PMI data, incomplete documents, and ignoring procedures and mechanisms. The PMI placement does not use a work visa.

The rise in non-procedural PMI placements is caused by several factors, such as low education, limited job opportunities in the country, high levels of poverty, limited access to information/lack of public understanding about PMI placement and protection procedures, persuasion, and sweet promises such as obtaining high salaries with a practical process, including the presence of brokers. The limited access to information, which results in a need for more public understanding regarding procedures for departure, placement, and protection of PMI, impacts the emergence of many brokers or individuals who are ready to take care of non-procedural PMI through inappropriate procedures. Therefore, PMI candidates must be registered in the Computerized Overseas Workforce System (SISKOKTKLN).

The increase in people/individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors; namely, the perpetrators receive a relatively large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, educational conditions, and knowledge of victims/victims' families who are not aware of the placement. PMI, the victim's economic limitations, means that they are easily persuaded and promised significant wages by the perpetrator.

Several violations were committed by the Private Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (PPTKIS), which has now changed its name to the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI).

1. Placement Fees that are Too High (overcharging). The Minister of Manpower and Transmigration Regulation Number 14/MEN /X/2010 regulates the burden of the placement costs that Migrant Workers must bear, including identity documents, health checks, psychology, job training, and work competency certification. Other costs are borne by Indonesian Migrant Worker (PMI) service users. Apart from these costs, migrant workers must bear other costs; that are regulated by a ministerial decree. Placement fees were regulated in various Ministerial Decrees, as a reference for the placement of Indonesian migrant workers abroad. The mechanism for paying placement fees for migrant workers has been criticized because placement fees are too high. The government's support for the fate of migrant workers, especially Indonesian migrant workers, has not been optimally implemented. However, many problems still need to be addressed. Case data from the Indonesian Migrant Workers Union (SBMI) from 2015 to 2017 showed 1,501 complaints from various countries. The biggest complaints were related to expensive fees or overcharging. The cause of Overcharging is that Migrant Workers have signed the placement fee or Cost Structure (CS), but PPTKIS or P3MI still ask for additional money from prospective Migrant Workers (PMI) because the CS fee is lower. By contrast, in reality, the CS fee by the Regulation of the Minister of Manpower and Transmigration Number 14/MEN/X/2010 is no longer relevant. There is no synchronization with other regulations, such as the Minister of Health's regulations regarding medical checkups and immigration regulations regarding passports, whereas in the CS, medical fees and passports are no longer covered by these other regulations.
2. Falsification of the Identity of Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI). The act of forgery is only known in advanced societies, where specific data facilitates the flow of relations in society. Identity falsification/manipulation consists of two syllables. Manipulation is a loan word originating in English: manipulation, which means misuse or misappropriation. In 2020, the Criminal Investigation Agency (Bareskrim) handled cases related to Migrant Worker Identity Falsification carried out by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI), which did not comply with procedures for recruiting prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI). Of these, there are many prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (CPMI) or Prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (CTKI) who are not yet sufficiently old. However, in some PPTKIS/P3MI, many use services to change the age of the E-KTP and family cards, which is one of the requirements for making a passport. In addition, in the maritime sector, especially for fisheries, whether placed domestically or abroad, many companies use the services of individuals or what we could call "brokers" to create seaman's books and other skills certificates in a way that is against the law or illegal.

3. Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) do not receive sufficient job training. Article 12, paragraph 1 of Law Number 13 of 2003 states that employers are responsible for providing job training to improve the competence of workers. However, for entrepreneurs who meet the requirements regulated by the Minister of Manpower, increasing worker competency is an obligation according to Article 12, paragraph 2 of Law Number 13 of 2003. PPTKIS/P3MI are obliged to register with CPMI to participate in work competency training under Article 23 of Regulation Minister Number 22 of 2014. However, in reality, for many companies, to make a profit with little capital and a short time, training programs to support PMI competency often do not go through the appropriate channels in making CPMI competency certificates; among these cases, CPMI will be sent to the Destination Country; for example, in Taiwan, the CPMI should take part in job and language training, but in reality, the CPMI can leave for the destination country in a short time of around one week. Therefore, from this case example, it can be seen that CPMI or CPTKI cannot learn job and language training in one week because, judging from the CPMI's educational strata, the average is only an elementary school graduate. Thus, it was one of the factors that caused violence against CPMI and CTKI -(Eddyono, 2021).

The reason for this is the lack of supervision from the government, which resulted in PPTKIS/P3MI being naughty in sending CPMI and CPTKI, who still had not received sufficient training abroad to meet the PPTKIS/P3MI annual targets.

Regulations and Application of Legal Sanctions for Perpetrators of Non-Procedural Delivery of Indonesian Migrant Workers Linked to Human Trafficking

Indonesia has had special regulations regarding PMI since Law No. 34 of 2004 concerning the Placement and Protection of Indonesian Workers Abroad (UU PPTKILN). This is the first law to specifically regulate migrant workers. Although the existence of this law was pushed for by non-governmental organizations to overcome the violence and exploitation experienced by migrant workers, especially women, the ratification of this law received criticism, considering that its contents were deemed to prioritize the process of placing PMIs rather than their protection. The existence and implementation of the law are not considered to help women who are non-regular migrant workers -(Barid et al., 2022).

This law provides criminal regulations for parties that place migrant workers at work without permission. This law also criminalizes people who place prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (TKI) in positions or places of work that are contrary to human values and decency. Other crimes that are also regulated in this law include manipulating exam results, not guaranteeing health insurance, the process of transferring Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Implementation Permits (SIPPTKI) and TKI Mobilization Permits, and placing TKI without documents. Although it does not mention the term illegal undocumented or irregular migrant workers, this article could be a reference point for the non-procedural placement of female migrant workers. However, not all these acts are crimes. However, some are called violations, namely, the placement of TKI without written permission and the placement of TKI or TKI without a Foreign Worker Card (abbreviated as KTKLN).

The 2017 PPMI Law replaced the PPTKILN Law. The 2017 PPMI Law defines migrant workers without distinguishing between procedural and non-procedural statuses. Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) are stated as follows: "every Indonesian citizen who will, is, or has done work for wages outside the territory of the Republic of Indonesia". The scope of the PMI in question is threefold: a) Indonesian Migrant Workers who work for legal entity employers, b) Indonesian Migrant Workers who work for individual or household employers, and c) seafarers and fisheries sailors.

This law does not differentiate between PMI status, which includes procedural and non-procedural, as stated in the Migrant Workers Convention (1990), ratified in 2012. This lack of distinction does not necessarily mean that the position of PMI with procedural and non-procedural statuses is different. Even in the process of forming the PPMI Law, it was found that members of the Community Representative Council (DPR) did not want to touch on the issue of non-procedural migrant workers, as they considered the discussion of non-procedural PMI to be very complex -(Tan & Shahrullah, 2017). According to them, it would be unwise to open protection expressly because it is feared that it will increase the number of non-procedural PMIs. At that time, DPR members focused on eliminating non-procedural PMI, as this effort was accommodated in the PPMI Law.

The protection regulations for PMI in this law emphasize protection before, during, and after work. In this context, work is emphasized as doing work in a country where you work. From the start, protection has been emphasized by protecting the administrative form, namely, the procurement of complete and valid work documents and determining working conditions. This initial protection process forms the basis for the subsequent protection.

Regarding regulations regarding prohibitions and punishments, the law has similarities and differences from those regulated by the PPTKILN Law. The PPMI Law expands the subject of punishment not limited to companies that place PMI but includes individuals and corporations related to 1) prohibition of transferring or reassigning PMI Delivery Permits; 2) prohibition of placing PMI candidates who do not meet health and psychological requirements; and 3) Prohibition of PMI placements that are not by the work agreement. Another difference is that the PPMI Law emphasizes the prohibition of placements, in contrast to statutory regulations. At the same time, the PPTKILN Law has three frameworks: prohibiting placements contrary to humanity, moral norms, and statutory regulations -(Eddyono, 2021).

Apart from that, this law also introduces new prohibitions, which include: a) providing incorrect information in filling out each document required in the migration process; b) Placement that is not by the work agreement is detrimental; c) Placement to certain countries that are declared closed for placement; d) PMI placement without a PMI Handover Permit; e) Placement of PMI without going to a country where there is no agreement between the Republic of Indonesia and that country; and e) does not have a social or insurance system that protects foreign workers.

The PPMI Law also makes government officials legal subjects who can be punished for all types of crimes above, emphasizing the abuse of their power. Efforts to eliminate non-regular PMI can be seen from the numerous prohibitions contained in this law. However, the target of the PPMI Law covers all parties, including the PMI, who provide incorrect information while filling out the documents. In addition, the PPMI Law also decriminalizes several acts prohibited in the PPTKILN Law, which include: a) Placement of PMI candidates who do not have a Foreign Worker Card (abbreviated as KTKLN); b) Employing PMI candidates who are currently undergoing education and training; and c) Detention of PMI departures who do not meet the document requirements.

Since the existence of Law No. 21 of 2007 concerning Human Trafficking, it should be considered necessary for protecting female migrant workers who experience exploitation or fraud during the migration process. This law combines several types of human trafficking in which human trafficking aims to exploit a person/group of people. Exploitation in the context of human trafficking includes a) sexual exploitation in the form of prostitution or sexual exploitation; b) exploitation or use of a person's energy to work in the form of forced service, slavery, or practices similar to slavery, oppression including physical use of a person; and c) exploitation of reproductive organs and; transplantation of organs or body tissue of a person -(Mihardi, 2020).

This exploitation is performed to obtain benefits from the person being exploited through material or immaterial benefits. Law No. 21 of 2007 clearly states that the various exploitations carried out above are crimes in which perpetrators can be punished with criminal penalties. Punishment includes a) Recruit, transporting, harboring, sending, transferring, or receiving someone; b) by the threat of violence, use of force, kidnapping, confinement, forgery, fraud, abuse of power or vulnerable position, debt bondage or providing payments or benefits; c) despite obtaining the consent of the person who has control over another person; d) for exploitative purposes -(Vicky & Rahaditya, 2022).

This law also punishes officials who abuse their powers, resulting in trafficking crimes. In the context of non-procedural migrant workers, the practice of human trafficking often occurs through falsifying identities and fraud, which is often carried out with the lure or promise of good work or wages and working conditions that will be provided -(Grange, 2005). Abuse or vulnerable positions often occur, such as being provided with funds or bailing out to finance document processing and placement. As shown in the example table below:

Law no. 6 of 2011 concerning immigration regulates procedures for crossing Indonesian borders, the requirements for crossing Indonesian borders, including documents required to be owned, the process of obtaining records, and the authority of immigration, including revoking travel documents. In the context of women's non-regular migrant workers, there are regulations regarding preventive measures, repressive measures, and criminal regulations for attempts to smuggle and trade people across national borders.

Punishment is regulated in this law for immigration crimes, including transnational crimes; such as smuggling and trafficking. Immigration crimes connected to the issue of women non-regular migrant workers include unprocedural entry or exit without going through an immigration inspection (Article 113). This law elaborates many crimes related to travel documents, which include (Articles 123-130) including making fake or falsifying travel documents, Visas or Entry Certificates, or Stay Permits: a) using fake or falsified Travel Documents, b) providing invalid data or incorrect information to obtain Travel Documents, c) have or use 2 (two) or more Republic of Indonesia Travel Documents of the same type and all of them are still valid, d) falsify or create false Travel Documents, e) keeping false or falsified Travel Documents, f) destroy, change, add, reduce, or remove, either in whole or in part, the information or stamps contained in the Travel Document, and g) control other people's travel documents -(Anggreini & Herlina, 2019).

Some of the prohibitions also emphasize crimes committed to oneself or others. This means that this law could enforce female non-regular migrant workers on travel documents or other parties who hold migrant worker travel documents -(Khalid & Savirah, 2022). Regarding cross-border smuggling crimes, the Immigration Law regulates the criminal act of smuggling as an act aimed at seeking profit, either directly or indirectly, for oneself or another person by bringing a person or group of people, organized or unorganized, or ordering another person to bring a person or group of people, whether organized or unorganized, into the Indonesian Territory or out of the Indonesian Territory and/or into the territory of another country, where the person does not have the right to enter the territory legally, either by using valid documents, fake documents, or without using Travel Documents -(Mahardika & Wicaksono, 2020).

Important elements in smuggling are a) the aim of making a profit, b) bringing or ordering people, individually or in groups, c) leaving or entering Indonesian Territory, d) with the situation, and d) not having legal rights/valid or fake documents/or without travel documents. Smuggling in the law, referring to Bassiouni, emphasizes illegal entry. Valid documents are important in smuggling. The sanctions vary unprocedural entry or exit without going through immigration inspection and means of transport that carry transportation as a mode of smuggling is punished with an alternative crime, namely imprisonment for a maximum of one year or a maximum fine of 100 million. Crimes related to documents are punished with an accumulative sentence, namely, a maximum of five years in prison and a fine of 500 million rupiah –(Daud & Sopoyono, 2019).

Law in Indonesia does not make the existence of non-procedural migrant workers explicit but prevents the existence of non-procedural migrant workers by making prohibitions contained in different laws, both in the Human Trafficking Law, the Immigration Law, and the PPMI Law (Yuliani & Rasalwati, 2020). The three existing regulations stipulate that perpetrators violate the prohibition of; both individual and corporate actors. The acts regulated are varied, but in the three laws, some acts are regulated, namely, providing false information, falsifying or creating fake travel documents, and entering or leaving without documents. In the Human Trafficking Law, this act is placed as part of the human trafficking act, whereas in the PPMI Law, the act can be a separate crime. In contrast, in the Immigration Law, it is placed either as a separate crime or a crime combined with a practice of smuggling or human trafficking.

However, since the existence of the Human Trafficking Law, the focus of the government and law enforcement has been more on handling sexual exploitation rather than on human trafficking in the context of labor exploitation. Before the Human Trafficking Law came into existence, Presidential Decree Number 88 of 2002 on the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Trafficking in Women and Children also laid down the framework for human trafficking not only in the context of prostitution, but also adopted legal and illegal migrant workers' children, mail-order brides, domestic servants, begging, pornography, drug trafficking, organ sales, and other forms of exploitation.

CONCLUSION

A migrant worker is someone who looks for work outside the country intending to earn income for daily life within a time limit determined following the work agreement. Every year, interest in PMI increases both procedurally and non-procedurally, resulting in increasing problems faced by PMI, such as violence, human trafficking, the death of migrant workers in destination countries, and the recruitment of undocumented or illegal workers. Non-procedural PMI placement is caused by several factors, such as low education, limited employment opportunities in the country, high levels of poverty, limited access to information/lack of public understanding of PMI placement and protection procedures, persuasion, and sweet promises such as getting a high salary with a practical process, including the presence of brokers. Meanwhile, the increase in people/individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors; namely, the perpetrators receive a fairly large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, the educational conditions and knowledge of the victim's family, and the victim's economic limitations. Several violations were committed by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI), namely: 1) Placement fees that were too high (overcharging); 2) falsifying the identity of Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI); and 3) Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) do not receive enough job training. Furthermore, perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placements s can be charged under Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning PPMI. They can also be subject to Law Number 21 of 2007 concerning the Eradication of the Crime of Human Trafficking and imprisonment or fines.

ABSTRACT

The program for placing Indonesian Migrant Workers abroad is one of the efforts to overcome the problem of unemployment. The government has enacted regulations regarding the placement of Indonesian migrant workers. However, there is still a non-procedural placement for Indonesian migrant workers, giving rise to new problems in handling it. This study aims to analyze the factors that encourage perpetrators to carry out the non-procedural placement of migrant workers and the application of legal sanctions for perpetrators. The research method uses a qualitative normative juridical approach, which looks at problems from the study of legal materials such as books or articles that discuss research themes as references for primary and secondary legal materials. The data analysis technique used d was descriptive analysis. The results of this research show that the increase in people or individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors; namely, the perpetrators receive a relatively large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, the educational conditions and knowledge of the victim or victim's family, and the victim's economic limitations. Perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement can be charged, apart from Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning PPML; which can also be subject to Law Number 21 of 2007 concerning the Eradication of Criminal Acts of Trafficking in Persons (PTPPO), which is subject to legal sanctions of imprisonment or fines.

INTRODUCTION

Law is understood as a coercive order; that applies sanctions as coercive actions. The provisions explaining the law will appear as a statement that under certain conditions, which are also determined by that legal order, specific coercive actions are also determined by that order. The problem of migrant workers continues to influence Indonesia's employment conditions, primarily related to the management, placement, and protection of migrant workers abroad. The government's way to reduce the unemployment rate is to place workers abroad as Indonesian migrant workers -(Muthia, 2020). Several problems are on the government's agenda that must be resolved; among these problems are the lack of job opportunities, the low economic level of society, and the low competitiveness of Indonesian migrant workers; these are serious problems that must be resolved -(Sulaksono, 2018). To solve existing problems, it is hoped that sending migrant workers will be an alternative solution. On one hand, remittances are an essential indicator of the economy of migrant worker families in migrant workers' home villages.

The high number of Indonesian citizens interested in becoming migrant workers, supported by the above factors, means that many agencies providing migration work are starting to emerge (Bulan, 2021). On the other hand, the emergence of migrant job providers cannot be trusted by the 100% safety of their workers. The broker agents that are emerging at the moment are taking advantage of the situation of high demand for workers with worrying economic conditions and the lack of education of prospective migration workers so that prospective migration workers prefer to take shortcuts by using brokers rather than training first to meet the requirements of the provisions as PMI (Febrianti & Afifah, 2023).

The large number of crimes that occur among migrant workers is a risk foref the creation of non-procedural migration workers by broker agents, who bring workers without going through proper procedures (Indrayani Arief, 2021). Risks such as fraud, violence, exploitation, human smuggling, human trafficking, and even murder can occur among Indonesian migrant workers who are victims of non-compliance with the requirements and procedures set out in the laws in force in Indonesia (Farbenblum et al., 2013).

The number of irregular migrant workers is predicted to be quite large. The International Organization for Migration reports that there are approximately 58 million irregular or undocumented migrant workers. They are considered 'illegal' migrant workers because of several conditions, such as entering a country not by the procedures established by immigration law in that country, they are in a country but exceeding the period permitted by a visa, and travel document (passport) is no longer valid, or because they work without being registered as workers by labor law in a foreign country (Soulina & Yovani, 2020). These data are relatively high; at least a third of the world's migrant worker population reaches 150.3 million (Kusdarini et al., 2021).

Indonesia contributes data on non-regular migrant workers at a global level. The World Bank notes that nine million Indonesian migrant workers work abroad, with the main destinations being Malaysia, Saudi Arabia, China, Hong Kong, and Singapore, where 48% of Indonesian Migrant Workers migrate non-procedurally. It is estimated that 70 percent of non-procedural migrant workers are women. Indonesia is the second largest country in Southeast Asia after the Philippines, with more than 25 migrant workers. It can be seen from data from the Indonesian Migrant Worker Protection Agency (BP2MI), which started from early January to September 2022, that there have been 122,870 people in various countries (Noor, 2023). The data obtained differ significantly from previous years, especially during the COVID-19 pandemic, when sending migrant workers was very limited. The average number of people currently registered is graduates of Senior High Schools (SMA).

The increasing number of interested migrant workers also benefits the government because it can help reduce the number of unemployed people and increase foreign exchange. Prospective migrant workers think that working abroad is profitable because they receive much better wages than they do in Indonesia. However, they must consider the high risks that they will experience (Dananjaya, 2020). The risks that will be experienced include violence, human trafficking, sexual exploitation, unpaid wages according to work agreements, and very long working hours.

Based on the risks experienced by migrant workers, BP2MI has received complaints from Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) in various countries regarding the problems they experienced while working abroad. Currently, BP2MI has notified PMI complaints from January to September 2022, namely from Saudi Arabia as much as 29.5% with a total of 50 complaints, Malaysia as much as 16.5% with a total of 28 complaints, Taiwan as much as 10.6% with 18 complaints, the UAE as much as 7% with 12 complaints, Poland as much as 6% with 10 complaints, and as many as 30.4% with 51 complaints. The complaints consisted of 102 illegal migrant workers, 83 complaints about unpaid salaries, 93 complaints of deaths in the destination country, 13 complaints of violence, and 40 complaints of human trafficking. Of the many complaints received, they were legal workers, or what could be called non-procedural workers. This is closely related to the PMI's departure until they arrive at the destination country, where they are trapped in the game between brokers (Nuraeny, 2023).

Brokers have routes across various countries that are easy to travel; thus, they can convince local people to manage departures to work abroad. It has been regulated in Article 72 (b) of Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the prohibition of placement in closed countries, and prospective migrant workers must be placed in countries by the work agreement. This has also been regulated, as in Article 71 of Law Number 18 of 2017 -(Dewi et al., 2021). Prospective migrant workers whose departure is illegal can still leave because they use fake documents prepared by brokers from migrant worker-sending companies. Non-procedural migrant workers are vulnerable to dangerous risks such as violence, human trafficking, and sexual exploitation, not to mention if they work abroad. There is an inspection of the data collection of their citizens, which can arrest non-procedural migrant workers—the persons responsible for collecting resident data -(Zamhir et al., 2023). It should be remembered that non-procedural migrant workers do not have official documents; therefore, for those who experience violence or other risks abroad, the Indonesian government finds it very difficult to provide legal protection to non-procedural migrant workers (Puanandini, 2020). This differs from legal or procedural migrant workers; if they experience violence or have their rights confiscated by their employers, they will receive legal protection under Article 7 of Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers.

To protect Indonesian migrant workers abroad, the government issued Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers and various other regulations that regulate the placement mechanism for Indonesian migrant workers. This is done to protect migrant workers from becoming victims of human trafficking, violence, and other crimes. Despite this, there are still many Indonesian migrant workers who do not fulfill the procedures set out in statutory regulations. This has become the government's concern, and it is trying to provide a deterrent effect to perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement. Based on the problems above, researchers are interested in studying law enforcement for perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement by limiting it to what factors support perpetrators in carrying out non-procedural PMI placement, and how legal sanctions are applied to perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placement in Indonesia.

METHOD

The method used in this research is a normative juridical research method with descriptive-analytical research specifications, namely, studying and analyzing the non-procedural sending of Indonesian migrant workers and providing an objective picture relating to law enforcement against perpetrators of criminal acts that protect Indonesian migrant workers linked to human trafficking. Based on Law No. 18 of 2017 and Law No. 21 of 2007. This research uses secondary data, including primary legal materials, secondary legal materials, and tertiary legal materials, namely statutory regulations, books, scientific articles, and data taken from websites/the Internet. Library research was used as the data-collection technique.

RESULT AND DISCUSSIONS

Factors and Violations of Non-Procedural Placement of Indonesian Migrant Workers

The large population is disproportionate to available jobs, which causes poverty and the inability to meet their living needs and livelihoods, thus requiring most Indonesian people to move to other countries to get work abroad (Firdaus & Simangunsong, 2023). Migration of workers is an essential economic activity for sending and receiving countries. The high migration flow in this region is due to countries that are economically dependent on migrant workers. Receiving countries are dependent on migrant workers for economic mobilization, which can be seen from the high number of migrant workers in the country -(Muthia, 2020).

The yearly increase in Indonesian citizens becoming migrant workers and looking for work abroad in both the formal and informal sectors is due to various reasons, including domestic unemployment, insufficient domestic employment opportunities, disparities in global and regional economic growth, advances in transportation technology and information, and the right to work abroad. The pull factor that exists abroad in the form of higher wages makes workers more interested in working abroad. Working abroad has a positive side, namely, overcoming some unemployment problems in the country. On the other hand, there is a negative side in the form of the risk of possible inhumane treatment of PMI -(Febrianti & Afifah, 2023).

Data on the placements of Indonesian Migrant Workers up to June 2023 illustrate that the number of placements of Indonesian Migrant Workers has increased over the last two years; namely, in June 2023, placements reached 20,388; in June 2022, there were 15,700 placements; and in June 2021, there were 6,661 placements. In June 2023, the majority of Indonesian Migrant Workers were placed in the formal sector, with 11,645 placements (55%), while 8,743 placements (45%) were placed in the informal sector (Nuraeny, 2023).

Based on the G to G Program placement scheme (PMI placement with the government-to-government scheme through the Indonesian Migrant Worker Protection Agency (BP2MI)), the number of Indonesian Migrant Workers placed by BP2MI in June 2023 was 963 placements, with 652 placements to South Korea, 311 placements to Japan in June 2023, and 0 placements to Germany. Meanwhile, based on the P-to-P placement scheme (PMI placement with a private-to-private or company-to-company scheme. This placement is carried out by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI) with the agency in the destination country. Previously, P3MI was known as PJTKI or PPTKIS). P3MI placed 15,301 Indonesian Migrant Workers. Based on the Individual Placement Scheme, there were 1,848 placements. Based on the Placement Scheme for the Company's Own Benefits (UKPS), there were 17 placements. Complaint data increased in June 2023 compared with June 2021 and 2022. Most complaints in June 2023 came from Saudi Arabia, Malaysia, and Hong Kong, whereas West Java and Central Java were the provinces with the highest complaints in June 2023. The most common complaints include Indonesian Migrant Workers wanting to be repatriated and placement costs exceeding ing the fee structure.

The stages of PMI placement, as regulated in Article 9 of Government Regulation Number 10 of 2020, often need to be followed according to the se rules. This is what is called non-procedural PMI placement, whose victims have the possibility of becoming victims of human trafficking, violence, or other crimes. The non-procedural placement of migrant workers is the placement of Indonesian citizens who work abroad without going through correct PMI placement procedures by applicable laws and legal provisions, including falsifying documents and manipulating prospective PMI data, incomplete documents, and ignoring procedures and mechanisms. The PMI placement does not use a work visa.

The rise in non-procedural PMI placements is caused by several factors, such as low education, limited job opportunities in the country, high levels of poverty, limited access to information/lack of public understanding about PMI placement and protection procedures, persuasion, and sweet promises such as obtaining high salaries with a practical process, including the presence of brokers. The limited access to information, which results in a need for more public understanding regarding procedures for departure, placement, and protection of PMI, impacts the emergence of many brokers or individuals who are ready to take care of non-procedural PMI through inappropriate procedures. Therefore, PMI candidates must be registered in the Computerized Overseas Workforce System (SISKOKTKLN).

The increase in people/individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors; namely, the perpetrators receive a relatively large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, educational conditions, and knowledge of victims/victims' families who are not aware of the placement. PMI, the victim's economic limitations, means that they are easily persuaded and promised significant wages by the perpetrator.

Several violations were committed by the Private Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (PPTKIS), which has now changed its name to the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI).

1. Placement Fees that are Too High (overcharging). The Minister of Manpower and Transmigration Regulation Number 14/MEN /X/2010 regulates the burden of the placement costs that Migrant Workers must bear, including identity documents, health checks, psychology, job training, and work competency certification. Other costs are borne by Indonesian Migrant Worker (PMI) service users. Apart from these costs, migrant workers must bear other costs; that are regulated by a ministerial decree. Placement fees were regulated in various Ministerial Decrees, as a reference for the placement of Indonesian migrant workers abroad. The mechanism for paying placement fees for migrant workers has been criticized because placement fees are too high. The government's support for the fate of migrant workers, especially Indonesian migrant workers, has not been optimally implemented. However, many problems still need to be addressed. Case data from the Indonesian Migrant Workers Union (SBMI) from 2015 to 2017 showed 1,501 complaints from various countries. The biggest complaints were related to expensive fees or overcharging. The cause of Overcharging is that Migrant Workers have signed the placement fee or Cost Structure (CS), but PPTKIS or P3MI still ask for additional money from prospective Migrant Workers (PMI) because the CS fee is lower. By contrast, in reality, the CS fee by the Regulation of the Minister of Manpower and Transmigration Number 14/MEN/X/2010 is no longer relevant. There is no synchronization with other regulations, such as the Minister of Health's regulations regarding medical checkups and immigration regulations regarding passports, whereas in the CS, medical fees and passports are no longer covered by these other regulations.
2. Falsification of the Identity of Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI). The act of forgery is only known in advanced societies, where specific data facilitates the flow of relations in society. Identity falsification/manipulation consists of two syllables. Manipulation is a loan word originating in English: manipulation, which means misuse or misappropriation. In 2020, the Criminal Investigation Agency (Bareskrim) handled cases related to Migrant Worker Identity Falsification carried out by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI), which did not comply with procedures for recruiting prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI). Of these, there are many prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (CPMI) or Prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (CTKI) who are not yet sufficiently old. However, in some PPTKIS/P3MI, many use services to change the age of the E-KTP and family cards, which is one of the requirements for making a passport. In addition, in the maritime sector, especially for fisheries, whether placed domestically or abroad, many companies use the services of individuals or what we could call "brokers" to create seaman's books and other skills certificates in a way that is against the law or illegal.

3. Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) do not receive sufficient job training. Article 12, paragraph 1 of Law Number 13 of 2003 states that employers are responsible for providing job training to improve the competence of workers. However, for entrepreneurs who meet the requirements regulated by the Minister of Manpower, increasing worker competency is an obligation according to Article 12, paragraph 2 of Law Number 13 of 2003. PPTKIS/P3MI are obliged to register with CPMI to participate in work competency training under Article 23 of Regulation Minister Number 22 of 2014. However, in reality, for many companies, to make a profit with little capital and a short time, training programs to support PMI competency often do not go through the appropriate channels in making CPMI competency certificates; among these cases, CPMI will be sent to the Destination Country; for example, in Taiwan, the CPMI should take part in job and language training, but in reality, the CPMI can leave for the destination country in a short time of around one week. Therefore, from this case example, it can be seen that CPMI or CPTKI cannot learn job and language training in one week because, judging from the CPMI's educational strata, the average is only an elementary school graduate. Thus, it was one of the factors that caused violence against CPMI and CTKI (Eddyono, 2021).

The reason for this is the lack of supervision from the government, which resulted in PPTKIS/P3MI being naughty in sending CPMI and CPTKI, who still had not received sufficient training abroad to meet the PPTKIS/P3MI annual targets.

Regulations and Application of Legal Sanctions for Perpetrators of Non-Procedural Delivery of Indonesian Migrant Workers Linked to Human Trafficking

Indonesia has had special regulations regarding PMI since Law No. 34 of 2004 concerning the Placement and Protection of Indonesian Workers Abroad (UU PPTKILN). This is the first law to specifically regulate migrant workers. Although the existence of this law was pushed for by non-governmental organizations to overcome the violence and exploitation experienced by migrant workers, especially women, the ratification of this law received criticism, considering that its contents were deemed to prioritize the process of placing PMIs rather than their protection. The existence and implementation of the law are not considered to help women who are non-regular migrant workers (Barid et al., 2022).

This law provides criminal regulations for parties that place migrant workers at work without permission. This law also criminalizes people who place prospective Indonesian Migrant Workers (TKI) in positions or places of work that are contrary to human values and decency. Other crimes that are also regulated in this law include manipulating exam results, not guaranteeing health insurance, the process of transferring Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Implementation Permits (SIPPTKI) and TKI Mobilization Permits, and placing TKI without documents. Although it does not mention the term illegal undocumented or irregular migrant workers, this article could be a reference point for the non-procedural placement of female migrant workers. However, not all these acts are crimes. However, some are called violations, namely, the placement of TKI without written permission and the placement of TKI or TKI without a Foreign Worker Card (abbreviated as KTKLN).

The 2017 PPMI Law replaced the PPTKILN Law. The 2017 PPMI Law defines migrant workers without distinguishing between procedural and non-procedural statuses. Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) are stated as follows: "every Indonesian citizen who will, is, or has done work for wages outside the territory of the Republic of Indonesia". The scope of the PMI in question is threefold: a) Indonesian Migrant Workers who work for legal entity employers, b) Indonesian Migrant Workers who work for individual or household employers, and c) seafarers and fisheries sailors.

This law does not differentiate between PMI status, which includes procedural and non-procedural, as stated in the Migrant Workers Convention (1990), ratified in 2012. This lack of distinction does not necessarily mean that the position of PMI with procedural and non-procedural statuses is different. Even in the process of forming the PPMI Law, it was found that members of the Community Representative Council (DPR) did not want to touch on the issue of non-procedural migrant workers, as they considered the discussion of non-procedural PMI to be very complex (Tan & Shahrullah, 2017). According to them, it would be unwise to open protection expressly because it is feared that it will increase the number of non-procedural PMIs. At that time, DPR members focused on eliminating non-procedural PMI, as this effort was accommodated in the PPMI Law.

The protection regulations for PMI in this law emphasize protection before, during, and after work. In this context, work is emphasized as doing work in a country where you work. From the start, protection has been emphasized by protecting the administrative form, namely the procurement of complete and valid work documents and determining working conditions. This initial protection process forms the basis for the subsequent protection.

Regarding regulations regarding prohibitions and punishments, the law has similarities and differences from those regulated by the PPTKILN Law. The PPMI Law expands the subject of punishment not limited to companies that place PMI but includes individuals and corporations related to 1) prohibition of transferring or reassigning PMI Delivery Permits; 2) prohibition of placing PMI candidates who do not meet health and psychological requirements; and 3) Prohibition of PMI placements that are not by the work agreement. Another difference is that the PPMI Law emphasizes the prohibition of placements, in contrast to statutory regulations. At the same time, the PPTKILN Law has three frameworks: prohibiting placements contrary to humanity, moral norms, and statutory regulations -(Eddyono, 2021).

Apart from that, this law also introduces new prohibitions, which include: a) providing incorrect information in filling out each document required in the migration process; b) Placement that is not by the work agreement is detrimental; c) Placement to certain countries that are declared closed for placement; d) PMI placement without a PMI Handover Permit; e) Placement of PMI without going to a country where there is no agreement between the Republic of Indonesia and that country; and e) does not have a social or insurance system that protects foreign workers.

The PPMI Law also makes government officials legal subjects who can be punished for all types of crimes above, emphasizing the abuse of their power. Efforts to eliminate non-regular PMI can be seen from the numerous prohibitions contained in this law. However, the target of the PPMI Law covers all parties, including the PMI, who provide incorrect information while filling out the documents. In addition, the PPMI Law also decriminalizes several acts prohibited in the PPTKILN Law, which include: a) Placement of PMI candidates who do not have a Foreign Worker Card (abbreviated as KTKLN); b) Employing PMI candidates who are currently undergoing education and training; and c) Detention of PMI departures who do not meet the document requirements.

Since the existence of Law No. 21 of 2007 concerning Human Trafficking, it should be considered necessary for protecting female migrant workers who experience exploitation or fraud during the migration process. This law combines several types of human trafficking in which human trafficking aims to exploit a person/group of people. Exploitation in the context of human trafficking includes a) sexual exploitation in the form of prostitution or sexual exploitation; b) exploitation or use of a person's energy to work in the form of forced service, slavery, or practices similar to slavery, oppression including physical use of a person; and c) exploitation of reproductive organs and; transplantation of organs or body tissue of a person -(Mihardi, 2020).

This exploitation is performed to obtain benefits from the person being exploited through material or immaterial benefits. Law No. 21 of 2007 clearly states that the various exploitations carried out above are crimes in which perpetrators can be punished with criminal penalties. Punishment includes a) Recruit, transporting, harboring, sending, transferring, or receiving someone; b) by the threat of violence, use of force, kidnapping, confinement, forgery, fraud, abuse of power or vulnerable position, debt bondage or providing payments or benefits; c) despite obtaining the consent of the person who has control over another person; d) for exploitative purposes -(Vicky & Rahaditya, 2022).

This law also punishes officials who abuse their powers, resulting in trafficking crimes. In the context of non-procedural migrant workers, the practice of human trafficking often occurs through falsifying identities and fraud, which is often carried out with the lure or promise of good work or wages and working conditions that will be provided -(Grange, 2005). Abuse or vulnerable positions often occur, such as being provided with funds or bailing out to finance document processing and placement. As shown in the example table below:

Law no. 6 of 2011 concerning immigration regulates procedures for crossing Indonesian borders, the requirements for crossing Indonesian borders, including documents required to be owned, the process of obtaining records, and the authority of immigration, including revoking travel documents. In the context of women's non-regular migrant workers, there are regulations regarding preventive measures, repressive measures, and criminal regulations for attempts to smuggle and trade people across national borders.

Punishment is regulated in this law for immigration crimes, including transnational crimes, such as smuggling and trafficking. Immigration crimes connected to the issue of women non-regular migrant workers include unprocedural entry or exit without going through an immigration inspection (Article 113). This law elaborates many crimes related to travel documents, which include (Articles 123-130) including making fake or falsifying travel documents, Visas or Entry Certificates, or Stay Permits: a) using fake or falsified Travel Documents, b) providing invalid data or incorrect information to obtain Travel Documents, c) have or use 2 (two) or more Republic of Indonesia Travel Documents of the same type and all of them are still valid, d) falsify or create false Travel Documents, e) keeping false or falsified Travel Documents, f) destroy, change, add, reduce, or remove, either in whole or in part, the information or stamps contained in the Travel Document, and g) control other people's travel documents -(Anggreini & Herlina, 2019).

Some of the prohibitions also emphasize crimes committed to oneself or others. This means that this law could enforce female non-regular migrant workers on travel documents or other parties who hold migrant worker travel documents -(Khalid & Savirah, 2022). Regarding cross-border smuggling crimes, the Immigration Law regulates the criminal act of smuggling as an act aimed at seeking profit, either directly or indirectly, for oneself or another person by bringing a person or group of people, organized or unorganized, or ordering another person to bring a person or group of people, whether organized or unorganized, into the Indonesian Territory or out of the Indonesian Territory and/or into the territory of another country, where the person does not have the right to enter the territory legally, either by using valid documents, fake documents, or without using Travel Documents -(Mahardika & Wicaksono, 2020).

Important elements in smuggling are a) the aim of making a profit, b) bringing or ordering people, individually or in groups, c) leaving or entering Indonesian Territory, d) with the situation, and d) not having legal rights/valid or fake documents/or without travel documents. Smuggling in the law, referring to Bassiouni, emphasizes illegal entry. Valid documents are important in smuggling. The sanctions vary unprocedural entry or exit without going through immigration inspection and means of transport that carry transportation as a mode of smuggling is punished with an alternative crime, namely imprisonment for a maximum of one year or a maximum fine of 100 million. Crimes related to documents are punished with an accumulative sentence, namely, a maximum of five years in prison and a fine of 500 million rupiah (Daud & Sopoyono, 2019).

Law in Indonesia does not make the existence of non-procedural migrant workers explicit but prevents the existence of non-procedural migrant workers by making prohibitions contained in different laws, both in the Human Trafficking Law, the Immigration Law, and the PPMI Law (Yuliani & Rasalwati, 2020). The three existing regulations stipulate that perpetrators violate the prohibition of, both individual and corporate actors. The acts regulated are varied, but in the three laws, some acts are regulated, namely, providing false information, falsifying or creating fake travel documents, and entering or leaving without documents. In the Human Trafficking Law, this act is placed as part of the human trafficking act, whereas in the PPMI Law, the act can be a separate crime. In contrast, in the Immigration Law, it is placed either as a separate crime or a crime combined with a practice of smuggling or human trafficking.

However, since the existence of the Human Trafficking Law, the focus of the government and law enforcement has been more on handling sexual exploitation rather than on human trafficking in the context of labor exploitation. Before the Human Trafficking Law came into existence, Presidential Decree Number 88 of 2002 on the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Trafficking in Women and Children also laid down the framework for human trafficking not only in the context of prostitution, but also adopted legal and illegal migrant workers' children, mail-order brides, domestic servants, begging, pornography, drug trafficking, organ sales, and other forms of exploitation.

CONCLUSION

A migrant worker is someone who looks for work outside the country intending to earn income for daily life within a time limit determined following the work agreement. Every year, interest in PMI increases both procedurally and non-procedurally, resulting in increasing problems faced by PMI, such as violence, human trafficking, the death of migrant workers in destination countries, and the recruitment of undocumented or illegal workers. Non-procedural PMI placement is caused by several factors, such as low education, limited employment opportunities in the country, high levels of poverty, limited access to information/lack of public understanding of PMI placement and protection procedures, persuasion, and sweet promises such as getting a high salary with a practical process, including the presence of brokers. Meanwhile, the increase in people/individuals involved in non-procedural PMI placement practices is due to economic factors; namely, the perpetrators receive a fairly large commission or service fee from each person who is sent, the perpetrators have a consumerist lifestyle, the educational conditions and knowledge of the victim's family, and the victim's economic limitations. Several violations were committed by the Indonesian Migrant Worker Placement Company (P3MI), namely: 1) Placement fees that were too high (overcharging); 2) falsifying the identity of Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI); and 3) Indonesian Migrant Workers (PMI) do not receive enough job training. Furthermore, perpetrators of non-procedural PMI placements can be charged under Law Number 18 of 2017 concerning PPMI. They can also be subject to Law Number 21 of 2007 concerning the Eradication of the Crime of Human Trafficking and imprisonment or fines.
